Where Would We Be Without Them?

Graduate Programs have not only changed the culture and enriched the academic quality at La Salle, they've enabled the university to be more competitive nationally

by Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61

La Salle offers all ten of its graduate programs on its main campus in northwest Philadelphia. Education, Human Services Psychology, and Nursing are also available at Bucks County Community College. The university sponsors the only MBA program in Bucks County at Delaware Valley College in Doylestown.

Almost a quarter-of-a-century ago, Raymond A. Ricci, then a young assistant to the dean of La Salle's Evening Division, was in charge of conducting "exit interviews" of graduating seniors. "What should La Salle be doing in the future?" he would ask.

"It would come up over and over and over again," recalls Ricci, now the university's vice president for enrollment services. "'MBA, MBA, MBA.' This was back in 1971."

Two years later, the economy turned sour. Then La Salle's enrollment, which had been bolstered for a while by the arrival of full-time coeds, hit a plateau and began to fall. College officials started looking for new ventures. Dr. Joseph Kane, then the dean of the School of Business Administration, chaired the feasibility committee that eventually paved the way for the establishment of the MBA program in 1976.

Today the university has ten separate graduate programs.

"I don't know where we'd be without them," said Ricci. "They roughly approach 25% of our total enrollment. They've enriched the quality of our undergraduate academic departments, particularly in business. There's more faculty research productivity because of it. The amount of research productivity is astonishing when you compare it to ten years ago. And the programs are all very entrepreneurial in a sense that each program was developed by a faculty member who anticipated an emerging public need."

The MBA enabled us to be much more competitive in the national market," said Kane. "I think it changed the culture here for better or for worse. It opened the door ultimately for a lot of other graduate programs to start. It helped us to become a university in 1984. It's made us much more of a cosmopolitan, up-to-date university."

University officials agree that even with the addition of the graduate programs, the La Sallian values—the personal commitment to students and the respect for the individual—have stayed the same. "As long as we have those values in place and keep them stable," said Kane, "all the programs and curriculum can change because we've got to keep up with what's going on in the world."

The M.A. in Theological, Pastoral, and Liturgical Studies started in 1950 as a graduate program in Theology for the Christian Brothers. In 1964, it was reorganized and opened to the general public as the Graduate Division in Religious Education. Ten years later, it incorporated Pastoral and Liturgical Studies with Pastoral Counseling becoming a separate program in 1979.

Graduate programs in Business Administration began in 1976 followed by Bilingual Bicultural Studies (1982), Education (1984), Human Services Psychology and Nursing (1987), Central and Eastern European Studies (1993), Computer Information Science and Professional Communication (1994).

Dr. Geoffrey B. Kelly, who was appointed director of Graduate Religion in January, has watched the program gradually change over the years from one primarily serving members of the religious—priests, nuns, and brothers—to people from the laity. Many of the students now include teachers of religious education and those dedicated to pastoral ministry as well as people making career changes who want to get more involved in their parish life. The summer program, which now offers shorter sessions ranging from one to three weeks, is highly popular with CCD people and directors of religious education who want to update their fields of expertise.

"The quality of our program is outstanding," said Kelly. "I would argue that our teachers are among the very best in the country. We draw on people who are not only scholars but also reputable teachers. That includes stars from our own faculty and such neighboring institutions as Manhattan College and the Lutheran Theological Seminary who have also distinguished themselves in field research."

In addition to offering renewal programs for teachers in the Camden and Trenton (NJ) and Wilmington dioceses, Graduate Religion at La Salle also has a strong international flavor. Students include a number of Christian Brothers from such countries as Australia and Ireland, nuns from Mexico and Cuba, and a missionary priest from South Africa.

Kelly hopes to draw from La Salle's faculty to establish a Summer Liturgical Institute in the near future. "There is no reason why we can't be a center of liturgical studies or a valuable source for updating and renewal for the priests, religious, and lay leaders of the Philadelphia Archdiocese," he explained.

Some 170 men and women—including medical doctors and other professionals—have graduated from the university's Pastoral Counseling program. They are now working in a variety of settings—heading up community mental health centers, serving in hospices, practicing as marriage and family therapists, working as psychologists in school systems, or engaged in private practice and counseling activities at locations extending from Florida to Newfoundland.

Dr. John A. Smith, who was named director of the program in January, said that the term Pastoral has created some confusion with the term being perceived as counseling in a pastoral setting. "That may have been true 10 or 15 years ago, but it's no longer the case," he explained. "People don't realize that La Salle offers a substantial training program in three specialties—marriage and family therapy, psychological counseling, and our family therapy of addictions concentration that was introduced five years ago."

La Salle's Pastoral Counseling graduate students are all required to fulfill a year's internship, with about half of them working in the university's well-equipped neighborhood clinic.

Hundreds of area residents—including single parents and homeless people—have been helped getting themselves re-established or have had family issues, situations with children in school, or mental health, addiction, or educational problems resolved.

"I think that we have a training program that's second to none," said Smith. "We have as solid a technical program as you can find. What also makes us unique is the spiritual component that is woven through the program. We respect the faith dimension in people's lives as well as their dignity. Our training reflects this all the way through. It's been well-established that the spiritual dimension has become an important part of psychotherapy."

In addition to enhancing the university's outstanding national reputation, La Salle's MBA program has made a significant impact on the corporate community in the Delaware Valley since graduating its first of 2,200 students in 1979. Standard and Poors ranks La Salle 10th among the nation's liberal arts colleges in the number of graduates who are top corporate leaders. MBA students at La Salle can specialize in accounting, finance, health care administration, management, management information systems, and marketing.

Although its enrollment has been impacted by the economic recession and "restructuring" at some companies, MBA director Gregory O. Bruce foresees some creative expansion in the near future. Discussions have been held with some companies who want La Salle to offer MBA courses on site. The university is also exploring more specialized graduate programs such as masters of science in accounting and finance.

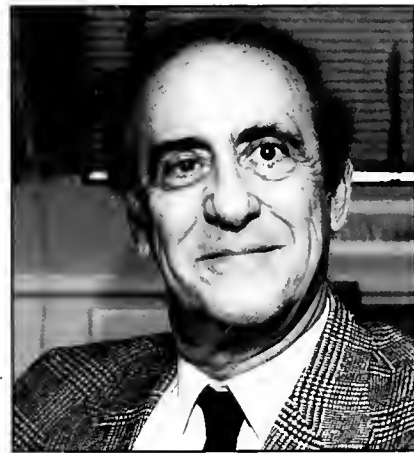

Gregory O. Bruce

"That's what the market place seems to be telling us," explained Bruce. "We want some professionally-oriented education, not necessarily the MBA."

"Everything that I read about companies and their needs, education is at the top of the list. It's the only way for organizations to remain globally competitive. The corporate leaders are the ones with the most educated workforce. La Salle's graduate education must move and shift with that. We're not offering all of the products now but I think that MBA expansion should be a major strategy."

Bilingual/Bicultural Studies, under the direction of Dr. Leonard A. Brownstein, consists of interdisciplinary courses in Spanish and Vietnamese languages, cross-cultural communication, and literary studies in the Caribbean area and Southeast Asia. In addition to graduating some 170 students, the program has generated more than $700,000 in grants from federal, state, city, and private funding sources in its 13-year history.

In addition to requiring 30 hours of supervised service in the community from its graduate students, La Salle's program meets a great many needs of people in the area because it is vocationally-oriented. Teachers, social workers, law enforcement officers—people who are involved in various kinds of urban services in the Hispanic or Asian community—have sharpened their language skills and have learned more about cross-cultural communication. Students are also required to do a research project, or translate a training or instructional manual for use in their own agency or classroom.

"It's not an Ivory Tower research-oriented program," said Brownstein. "This is not a literature-based program. It's very much related to contemporary problems in American life. There isn't another program like it in the Philadelphia area. We're unique. I've delivered presentations in places like Washington and Los Angeles and people don't understand why other schools haven't copied us."

Brownstein said that one of the more interesting aspects of the program is its interdisciplinary nature. One of his specialties is "English as a Second Language." Other language professors teach courses in "Caribbean Literature" while some combine for a team-taught course in "Urban Spanish," the Caribbean Spanish which is the language of choice to people in Philadelphia's Hispanic community. Professors from the university's Economics, History, and Education Departments also offer specialized courses focusing on bilingual community topics.

In addition to the master's degree, La Salle's nationally-recognized Graduate Education program also offers tracks leading to certification in elementary special education or certification in secondary education. More than 85% of its 230 graduates have been placed in the highly-competitive teaching profession. This success rate is attributable to a number of factors including the availability of dual certification in elementary special education.

"La Salle's reputation for good quality control combines to help us a lot," says Dr. Gary Clabaugh, director of graduate education. "So does the innovative nature of our program. It's evaluated and revised every year and in ten years it's become significantly different. People seek our graduates out because of how they're trained. Graduate education tends to lend itself to innovation."

One of the more distinctive elements of La Salle's program is its duration: because its graduate students live in the Delaware Valley, the university can offer essentially an 11-month program and, therefore, practicums or teaching experiences over three summers instead of one. The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania recently completed a major review of La Salle's teacher certification programs and found that the university met or exceeded all of the standards established by the Department of Education. Among its "remarkable total of 49 commendations," said Clabaugh, the Commonwealth's evaluating team commended La Salle for "...being at the forefront in the nation in its emphasis in human development and learning theory."

Dr. John J. Rooney

Clabaugh sees the job market for teachers improving considerably, especially in the Philadelphia area where there is "an enormous increase" in the number of elementary-age children. "The market's also getting better because of the aging population and early retirement of many public school teachers," added Clabaugh. "For the first time in many years, new schools are being built because of the baby boom."

Shortly after Dr. John J. Rooney established Pennsylvania's first Master of Arts program in Human Services Psychology, he was pleasantly surprised to find that a number of graduate students were relocating to Philadelphia to attend La Salle from as far away as California and even places like Nassau, the Philippines, and Ireland. "We certainly are a diversified group in terms of age and background," said Rooney. "People from throughout the country have heard about La Salle."

The university's HSP program is unique because it combines the clinical and counseling specialties with organizational psychology, which, Rooney explains, has been recommended on the national level. "Most people working in the field of psychology, whether they're working in a clinical setting, a counseling setting, or an organizational setting, are using the same background and the same skills," added Rooney. "We developed a program with that in mind."

"People from throughout the

Human Services Psychology students are also eligible to take electives in La Salle's other graduate programs. A course in Health Psychology—"perhaps the fastest growing field of psychology," according to Rooney—was introduced last Fall in conjunction with the Graduate Nursing Department. "So many of the health needs and problems of this country like over-eating, smoking, alcohol and drug-abuse—and many of the causes of most of the diseases—are really problems in behavior and lifestyle," added Rooney. "People in psychology specialize in solving these problems and coping with stress."

Enrollment in Human Services Psychology has grown from 11 students in 1987 to 117 today. Basically it's a three-year program, but about a dozen men and women are attending classes full-time and will probably finish a year early. "Students say that the program is demanding but they get something worthwhile out of it," said Rooney. All students are required to spend a year in field-placement where they gain supervised experience in a social service or mental health agency.

Master of Science in Nursing students may choose one of three track options—Community Health Nursing, country have heard about La Salle."

Clinical Administration, or Adult Health Nursing with a functional role either as a primary care nurse practitioner or clinical specialist. According to projections, says Dr. Marylou K. McHugh, R.N., the director of graduate nursing, "By the year 2000 the person in the health care system who will be the most in demand will be the nurse with the master's degree."

Although the health care system is changing every day in a profession filled with uncertainty, McHugh's research indicates that advanced practice nurses will be playing a major role in health care reform. Not only are these nurses more cost effective, adds McHugh, "There's better access to health care, there's better quality, and the cost is less because they can provide about 80% of the services of a general practitioner."

La Salle's Graduate Nursing program, which is fully accredited by the National League for Nursing, has grown from 40 students in 1987 to some 207 men and women today. If the projections stay constant, Dr. McHugh sees the program becoming even larger as the need for advanced practice nurses increases. Not only that, explains McHugh, but nurses have traditionally been out in the community with patients. "With our Nursing Center, we're in a wonderful location for giving our students good experience to be ready for health care reform."

La Salle's School of Nursing operates the only university-based nurse-managed center in the Philadelphia area that provides primary care services to a specified community. Graduate students specializing in community health nursing practice in that clinic. Operating out of two locations, one on campus and the other at the Germantown YWCA, they offer primary care, health promotion, disease prevention services, home visiting, case management and outreach to its neighbors.

Although Central and Eastern European Studies is less than two years old, the innovative, interdisciplinary program has already "made a substantial contribution to the intellectual, cosmopolitan atmosphere at La Salle," according to its director, Dr. Leo D. Rudnytzky. "The program is geared pretty much to contemporary events. It's been designed to reflect new realities that have emerged in that part of the world as a result of recent historic upheavals, particularly the disintegration of the Soviet Union and the reunification of Germany."

Rudnytzky said that there is a tremendous need for scholars, entrepreneurs, and other professional people to appreciate the disparate cultures of this area of the world and to understand the significance of its economic and political infrastructure. "Too many Americans today still think in terms of Moscow being the center and everything else is part of the empire which was the Soviet Union," he explained. "This just isn't so anymore." Among the first courses offered at La Salle were "Democratic Development of Eastern Europe" and "Great German Thinkers." The program is also designed to offer a "practical, even pragmatic track" in such areas as economics and business.

"Only an informed American intelligentsia can participate meaningfully in the democratic development of this area," Rudnytzky added. "This is also an opportunity to assist European Europe in its reconstruction through the re-education of its university population in the methods and techniques of Western literary, political, economic, and historical analysis."

As the only program of its kind in the Philadelphia area, Rudnytzky says that La Salle has attracted a number of "very competent, high caliber students." One was asked to take some time off from his studies to return to Ukraine last year and help supervise that nation's elections. Another student, a successful businessman, walked into class on the first day with an entire research paper already completed on "German and Ukrainian Philosophical Relations."

Dr. Margaret McManus

Computer Information Science, which began in the spring of 1994, is the first graduate program in the Philadelphia area to focus on use of the personal computer (PC), according to Dr. Margaret McManus, who was named its director in January.

"Our program is very unique because other programs emphasize concepts whereas we concentrate on applications and the PC environment," she explained. "We offer courses which are very practical where students can work in groups in collaborative learning settings. It's a combination of improving PC skills in both a hands-on and conceptual manner."

This semester, for example, courses are available in Advanced Data Base Management, which incorporates newer technology such as distributive data bases and client service technology, and Local Area Networks, where the students have hands-on opportunity to build these networks. A Special Topics course in "Multimedia Networking" is currently on the drawing board.

"It's kind of an extension of our tradition. But it brings us into the 21st century."

McManus said that the CIS program has doubled its enrollment since admitting its first 20 students last year. Most of them have some computer experience and have been working with data base systems in small companies or in such areas as banking or retailing for a few years. "Many of our students are working with main-frame computers. They can foresee their company going to PCs and they need some help making the transition."

The 36-credit Master of Arts in Professional Communication program "had a good recruiting season" in its first year, according to its director, Dr. Richard Goedkoop. Some 35 students enrolled when classes were first offered in the new South Campus Communication Center last September. Another 46 began courses in January.

"La Salle's program is quite different than any other graduate program offered in this area," explained Goedkoop. "Advanced courses, for example, represent the four areas in which the professional communicator is most likely to need expertise—interpersonal, mass, and organizational communication, and public relations.

"It is designed from a practical standpoint to enhance the skills of people heavily involved with writing, audiovisual services, or any of the information technologies used in the corporate world in such a way that it will make these professionals more competitive in the market place."

Goedkoop said that the program is most attractive to three categories of professionals—people working in the field without any formal academic or professional communications training, men and women interested in a career change, and people "well-entrenched" professionally who are looking for something more substantive to give themselves a competitive edge.

As Dr. Kane recalls, La Salle's Graduate Programs are very much like the Evening Division was in 1946—professional courses designed for working people who needed credentialing.

"It's kind of an extension of our tradition," La Salle's interim provost added. "But it brings us into the 21st century."

AN EXPLORER IN THE BOOK TRADE

Peter Dougherty
has established himself as one of America's leading publishers of books in economics and politics

By John Rodden,
'78

When Peter Dougherty, '71, was sitting in his College Hall classes a quarter-century ago, little did he realize that one day he would be publishing books by distinguished writers—and even Nobel Prize winners—which scholars would be citing and discussing, indeed even assigning, in university courses throughout the country.

Dougherty, 46, is today an executive editor at Princeton University Press, where he commissions and publishes books on social science and public affairs as well as scholarly books for the general reader. His fields of specialization are economics and politics, areas in which he has established himself as one of America's leading publishers and has worked with many of the pre-eminent American intellectuals and opinion makers. His publishing history of significant books ranges from college textbook classics to cutting-edge scholarship and important works of public policy:

from the twelfth edition of Nobel Laureate Paul Samuelson's Economics, the standard introductory text for two generations of college students, to The Catholic Ethic and the Spirit of Capitalism (1993) by Michael Novak, winner of the 1994 Templeton Prize for the advancement of religious culture, to Underwriting Democracy (1992), by the investor and philanthropist George Soros.

It all began at La Salle, says Dougherty, a reflective man of wide-ranging interests, who chooses his words carefully and says he first learned to cherish the written and spoken word at 20th and Olney.

After graduating from West Catholic in 1967, Dougherty majored in history at La Salle. He remembers fondly Minna Weinstein's course in modern European history and John Cziraky's course in nineteenth-century American history, which featured readings of outstanding works of scholarship. "The most wonderful part of the La Salle education was that we actually read the great books," says Dougherty.

Perhaps the best example of that traditional, book-centered approach to higher learning, Dougherty says, was the colonial history course of Brother (now Father) Thomas Donaghy, the author of the history of La Salle College, Conceived in Crisis, who assigned large parts of Charles McLean Andrews four-volume The Colonial Period in American History, originally published in the early 1930s. "That assignment was a good bit more than any of us had bargained for," Dougherty recalls with a laugh.

"A few years after graduation, I realized that I'd really received an excellent education," Dougherty says. He recalls that La Salle was swimming against the dominant experimental currents of higher education of that time, and so it took him awhile to appreciate fully that being "out of step" with educational trends would prove beneficial in the long run.

"The La Salle education wasn't 'relevant' or 'multicultural'—to use the catchwords of the 1960s and the 1990s—but it was solid," Dougherty says. "In the fundamental of humanistic studies—history, literature, and philosophy—I soon recognized that I was just as well prepared as any of my Ivy League colleagues. For me, as a publisher and disseminator of ideas, it has proven invaluable.

"We were offered a well-balanced educational meal, not a smorgasbord: We were required to read significant books at a time when students at some other universities were designing their own courses of study that rejected a tradition of time-honored works. La Salle's curriculum was almost antique by present-day standards. For example, I took a full year of metaphysics and a full year of medieval history—in some universities nowadays, you would be hard-pressed to find such relics in the catalog! But many institutions of higher learning are now moving back to a core curriculum—and that's precisely what La Salle had during my student days. La Salle's faculty communicated the basics successfully—and the return to those basics today shows that time has justified La Salle's faith in the fundamentals. And what made it work were the people: La Salle's faculty were excellent teachers—inspired, fundamentally decent, and dedicated human beings."

Dougherty's interest in connecting the world of ideas to public affairs also began in La Salle classrooms. He cites especially the American diplomatic history lectures of the late C. Richard Cleary, "a wonderful teacher" whose course helped Dougherty "better grasp the ethical complexities of the Vietnam War and the campus debates all around me."

Indeed, the Vietnam War marked Dougherty's generation. He stresses that much of his student life was spent outside the classroom, trying to understand "the wider historical and political context of the difficult moment in which I was living.

"We were working-class guys from Philadelphia, and we were torn by the war," Dougherty recalls. He notes that he does mean "guys," since La Salle did not begin admitting undergraduate women until 1969. "We questioned the elites, who had reacted so sharply against the war from the start—but conveniently so, since it was not they who had to fight in it.

"People forget that the majority of La Salle students and faculty supported the war," Dougherty notes. "During my first year (1967), many students expressed hostility toward anti-war activity. When I was a freshman, demonstrations were held against the anti-war activists! Not until 1969—by which time the gross immorality of the war became undeniable—did the majority of La Salle families stand opposed to the war. By spring of my junior year (1970), we were all marching against it.

The shift at La Salle came because the government had clearly bungled the war—and it now seemed as if the nightmare might drag on forever. We were first-generation college kids, from Catholic families loyal to America and bluntly anti-Communist. The irresponsibility of the government's conduct of the war cost them that loyalty and turned the La Salle campus against the war."

Vietnam wasn't the only issue that gripped the La Salle campus—and the nation. Race relations was another burning topic of controversy. Dougherty recalls the fateful day of April 4, 1968, when he heard that Martin Luther King, Jr. had been shot. He was attending a dance in the La Salle ballroom; suddenly the music went dead, the lights came up, and the party was cut short: a thunderbolt of shock and anguish was ricocheting through the room. Dougherty was with two black La Salle classmates, both of them friends and alumni from West Catholic. One was the late Jack Jones, '71, who was already appearing as a newsman on local Philadelphia television; the other was track star Paul Brown, class of '71. Dougherty drove them home as the entire city erupted in a storm of wrath and remorse.

"The announcement left us paralyzed," Dougherty recalls. "I remember that April night vividly—it was a warm, almost sweet night until the news struck. Then everything changed. Race remained a heated issue throughout this period. But La Salle did its best to engage its black neighborhoods through initiatives such as the Urban Studies Center and related programs. For all the trouble of those times, there remained some faith that blacks and whites could work through their differences and their tortuous history. It was the waning of the Great Society: We still maintained hope in government and in social solutions. And Martin Luther King's integrationist vision still prevailed; race had not yet become so politicized an issue as it is today, nor had separatism become a preferred solution to racial hostilities."

Upon graduation in 1971, Vietnam didn't figure in Dougherty's future. The war was winding down, and his number in the selective service lottery, which had been introduced during his senior year, was high ("around 260"). Nevertheless, his future was uncertain. He and two friends drove across the U.S. and "explored for a year." He applied to graduate programs in politics. But the uncertainties persisted.

A "providential" event then occurred—via another "La Salle connection," says Dougherty—that set him, quite unexpectedly, on track toward a career in publishing. In July 1972, just before his first fall semester in graduate school was to begin, Dougherty received a job lead from a La Salle friend, Chris Koch, son of English professor emeritus Claude Koch. It was an opportunity that Dougherty couldn't pass up: to take a position at Harcourt Brace Jovanovich in college book sales, working out of Baltimore.

"My entry into publishing was a complete accident," Dougherty says. "My job was to sell books, and I fell in love with the business on the spot.

And it led me into editorial work, which I've never regretted for a moment."

Dougherty moved to New York and advanced rapidly at Harcourt, becoming an editor in the social sciences by the late 1970s. His first significant intellectual mentor was the great Philadelphia-born sociologist Robert K. Merton, who served as Dougherty's advisory editor and taught him "how an editor can shape a book." In the early 1980s, Dougherty moved to McGraw-Hill, where in 1982 he initiated the eleventh edition of Paul Samuelson's Keynesian-oriented Economics with a new co-author, William Nordhaus of Yale. Dougherty, who cherishes his work with Samuelson—and still maintains contact with the elderly Nobel laureate and MIT professor emeritus—calls him "the greatest economist of the twentieth century."

In 1985, after thirteen years in college publishing, Dougherty made a major break: He took his first position in scholarly publishing, as the New York-based editorial director of the British firm Basil Blackwell. Here he began his career as an editor of major scholarly works, again in economics. He published such distinguished economists as Merton Miller of the University of Chicago and Harry Markowitz of the City University of New York, whose theories wielded great influence on Wall Street and earned them a share of the 1990 Nobel Prize. He also had the pleasure of publishing Harvard's Robert C. Merton, another leading economist and son of Dougherty's mentor.

His move to the Free Press in 1988 gave Dougherty the chance to make his deepest mark as an editor: He began to publish books for the general reader under the tutelage of its president, the late Erwin Glickes, whom Dougherty acknowledges as his second great mentor and "perhaps the master trade publisher of books by intellectuals." At the Free Press, Dougherty established his reputation as an editor of books in politics and public affairs. Among the books that he signed were Peter Bernstein's best-selling Capital Ideas: The Improbable Origins of Modern Wall Street, Larry Sabato's Feeding Frenzy: How Attack Journalism Has Trans- formed American Politics, Anatoly Sobchak's For a New Russia, and Chester E. Finn, Jr.'s We Must Take Charge: Our Schools and Our Future.

Dougherty's voice brightens as he relates his stories of working with these authors to shape and reshape public opinion. He recalls fondly how he rushed to publish Anatoly Sobchak, then mayor of Leningrad and a democratic leader in the USSR, as the Soviet Union verged on collapse in August 1991; how he helped media critic Larry Sabato—during that same month—launch his work that would influence press coverage of the 1992 presidential campaign; and how he brainstormed over education policy with Chester E. Finn, former Under-Secretary of the US Department of Education, whose We Must Take Charge advances proposals to reform local school districts that make it "the best book on elementary and secondary education in a generation." The book has figured decisively in President Clinton's policies to promote performance assessment programs, a nationwide system of in-depth student testing, and tuition vouchers.

"TO INFLUENCE THE
PUBLIC MIND IS A RARE OPPORTUNITY. IT IS SELDOM GRANTED TO
A PERSON. BUT BOOKS CAN DO THAT."

"Again and again, we were changing attitudes about how people thought and felt about public issues," Dougherty recalls. "It was heady stuff."

Since taking a position at Princeton University Press in 1992, Dougherty has continued to publish major books in the social sciences and public affairs, along with assuming new responsibilities in the management of the editorial department.

"Here at Princeton, I have the opportunity to use all my experience," Dougherty says. "I'm now drawing fully on my two decades of work with a broad range of authors and with various audiences throughout academic and commercial publishing." He adds that the Princeton campus is a "treasure trove" for a publisher. Two of his authors, Princeton economists David Card and Alan B. Krueger, chief economist of the Labor Department, have recently published a book, Myth and Measurement: The New Economics of the Minimum Wage, that influenced President Clinton's recent decision to push for an increase in the minimum wage.

Dougherty speaks with passion about his vocation as a publisher. Ideas do have consequences, he insists; the word can affect the world. Indeed the world of thought can not only affect, but even shape, the world of action.

And more than anything else, Dougherty is proud that several of the books that he has published "have transformed the national dialogue about public issues." A publisher can have no higher aspiration, he believes, than to convey public ideas effectively and to produce books that move hearts and minds beyond reflection to action. Dougherty dreams of one day running a major scholarly press himself, whereby he might, through careful selection and guidance of authors, play an even larger role in academic and public affairs.

"To influence the public mind is a rare opportunity," Dougherty says. "It is seldom granted to a person." Dougherty pauses. "But books can do that."

Peter Dougherty should know. Two decades after leaving La Salle, his career and convictions testify that books can indeed change individual lives—and thereby change the world.

La Salle's School of Business Awarded Prestigious AACSB Accreditation

Dr. Joseph A. Kane guided the AACSB process to a successful completion.

As Dr. Joseph A. Kane, '56, says, "It's been a long quest."

La Salle's School of Business Administration was officially notified on March 15 that it is now fully accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business (AACSB). The university thus takes its place among fewer than 300 elite institutions from among more than 1,200 Business Programs in the United States who have received this prestigious recognition.

La Salle also becomes the only Catholic college or university in the city of Philadelphia with AACSB accreditation.

"This confirms what we have known all along," said Kane, who was appointed interim provost last October after having served as dean of the School of Business Administration since 1984.

"It's a national validation of what we have been demonstrating for years in terms of teaching excellence, small classes, and a genuine, personal concern for our undergraduate and graduate students. Moreover, we are one of a small number of institutions with a high proportion of faculty who teach full-time and still find the hours to conduct scholarly research."

What makes the AACSB accreditation even more gratifying, explained Kane, is the fact that its three-person peer-review team gave La Salle its highest recommendation. "We weren't sure that they would realize that we had such a quality program," he added. "That was really kind of the icing on the cake."

In its overall assessment recommending accreditation, the AACSB team said that in addition to offering "quality education that provides a valuable service to the community," La Salle's School of Business Administration "is fulfilling its mission, has achieved high quality, and has processes in place for continuous improvement."

"SBA's mission, which in the context of valued-centered educational milieu that emphasizes teaching and social development, commits the school to seeking balance between contemporary business theory and practice while placing paramount importance on teaching learning enriched by scholarly research and professional activity."

The AACSB report added that La Salle's commitment is framed in the context of an emphasis on excellence in teaching and student development. "Clearly, faculty attracted to SBA are interested in a balance among teaching, research, and service and are committed to the notion of the centrality of students."

Dr. Lester Barenbaum, interim dean of the School of Business Administration, said that AACSB's recognition makes La Salle much more attractive to both students and prospective business employers, not only regionally, but nationally and internationally.

"We've long been recognized as a practitioner-oriented school with a timely, academically-rich business curriculum," explained Barenbaum. "There's always been a strong emphasis on interpersonal communication and business writing skills. Our Co-op and internship programs reflect well La Salle's solid network with the business community."

"Good jobs flow from a good curriculum," added Gregory O. Bruce, director of La Salle's MBA Program. "AACSB accreditation confirms that La Salle has a superior educational process offering a value-centered education that emphasizes excellent job skills."

Dr. Kane said that La Salle's quest for AACSB accreditation really goes back to 1969 when Dr. Bruce MacLeod became dean of the School of Business Administration and started attending AACSB conferences. "When Bruce came back from his first meeting, he was convinced that this was something that La Salle should do," recalled Kane.

The Business School curriculum went through what Kane calls "a major re-definition" in the early '70s and within a few years its essential structure was similar to the curriculum offered now. In 1986, after a year of campus-wide discussions, La Salle's trustees gave their approval not only to seek AACSB accreditation but to commit the resources necessary.

"We laid out an eight-year time line to do that," explained Kane, adding that the two major things that had to be done were hiring faculty with doctorates and encouraging all of the faculty to increase its volume and quality of scholarly and professional activity. "Hiring faculty and changing what people do on their job is something that comes slowly. So that, basically, took us a long period of time."

The effort paid off. When the AACSB team came in, they rated La Salle's scholarship and professional activity as "very strong" and its faculty credentials "very, very high" compared to AACSB's minimum standards.

The quest was over!

Explorer Athletes Join Atlantic 10 Conference in 1995-96

Athletic Director Bob Mullen discusses Explorers' new league affiliation at the teleconference.

La Salle's athletic program received a tremendous shot of adrenalin on Feb. 9 when the university accepted an invitation to join the Atlantic 10 Conference with competition beginning in the 1995-96 season.

The Explorers, who announced their withdrawal from the Midwestern Collegiate Conference on Jan. 23 after three years of competition, will participate in 17 of the Atlantic 10's sponsored men's and women's sports.

"This is an exciting moment," said La Salle's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., at the campus teleconference announcing the newest additions to the Atlantic 10. "In many respects, this is really coming home to a group of institutions that we both know and respect and will enjoy competing against."

"Not only are we returning home geographically which is in the northeast where we do most of our recruiting, but it's also coming home to join 3 5ths of the Big Five who will be in the A10. It's good to be back with Temple and St. Joe's because they've been friends with us for years."

"This is where we wanted to be all along. We've worked long and hard to get here," said La Salle's athletic director Robert Mullen, who expressed appreciation to officials from the other A10 schools, especially Temple basketball coach John Chaney. "He's been the one outspoken person in Philadelphia for years trying to get us into the Atlantic 10. We appreciate that."

"I'm ecstatic," said men's basketball coach Speedy Morris. "Unequivocally it's a prestigious conference. I think the league will be better than it's ever been. From a recruiting standpoint, it's going to be a gigantic shot in the arm. I guarantee you that."

Asked how difficult it was for him to recruit as a member of the Midwestern Collegiate Conference, Morris said: "I think we were involved with some very talented young people. We got to be finalists with these athletes and we didn't get them. I mean they'll be no excuses now."

Morris added that not only will be additional television exposure in the Atlantic 10 help, but the players he recruits now will be aware of the quality teams that La Salle will be playing in a "terrific conference" that will be an easier "sell" to the young people and their parents.

"The Atlantic 10 certainly presents a brand new challenge for our ladies," said La Salle's women's coach John Miller. "The A10 is one of the top ten women's conferences in the nation. I know that my players are very excited. Over the years our ladies have met the challenges and faced the challenges and, most of the time, conquered the challenges."

At the same time it was announced that University of Dayton and Virginia Tech also accepted invitations to join the league bringing its total membership to 12 teams.

Atlantic 10 Commissioner Linda Bruno said that the league officials are "extremely pleased" about the new members.

"When we identified that we wanted to expand by three teams," added Bruno, "these were the three schools that we focused on from the start because of their excellent traditions of academic and athletic excellence and commitment to broad-based athletic programs."

Fordham and Xavier will also be making their league debuts next year when the conference is split into a pair of six team divisions. La Salle will compete in the West Division with Dayton, Duquesne, George Washington, Virginia Tech, and Xavier. The East will be comprised of Fordham, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, St. Bonaventure, St. Joseph's, and Temple.

Atlantic 10 members will play each divisional opponent twice a year on a home-and-home basis and will face teams in the other division once each season. Thus, each school will have 16 league games, allowing for 10 non-conference contests.

Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., presents President's Medals to Francis J. (Tim) Dunleavy (right) and his wife, Albina, during the Board of Trustees meeting on Oct. 30. Mr. Dunleavy, who has been named an Emeritus Member of the Board, served as a trustee from 1969 to 1994.

La Salle Perspective Makes Debut on WSSJ Radio

La Salle University's Perspective, a monthly 30 minute interview show exploring significant issues of higher education, made its debut on WSSJ Radio (1310 AM), the super-station serving the Delaware Valley, in January.

Wendy McLaughlin, the university's director of financial aid; Christopher Lydon, director of undergraduate admissions, and Louis A. Lamorte, Jr., director of career planning, were the guests on the first three programs.

Although La Salle administrators and faculty members are featured as the experts on Perspective, the program content is of a generic nature, applying to topics that concern all colleges and universities.

Robert S. Lyons, Jr., director of the university's News Bureau, is host of the shows. Future programs will be aired at 7:00 P.M. on April 18 and May 23.

Honors Students Participate in Simulated Face-to-Face Encounter Between U.S. and Russian Arms Control Experts

Dr. William F. Burns (standing, center) presides over simulated signing ceremony following negotiations between American and Russian delegations during senior honors seminar.

Students of public affairs in the university's Honors Program enjoyed a unique opportunity to participate in some delicate international relations under the direction of the former director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency during the 1994 Fall semester.

Some 15 students comprising a senior seminar in international negotiation participated in a simulated face-to-face encounter between American and Russian experts. The issue explored by the seminar was the problem of the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction, principally nuclear weapons which were once the arsenal of the Soviet Union.

The students, led by Dr. William F. Burns, '54, former director of the United States Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and special envoy to Russia on nuclear dismantlement in the Bush Administration, first investigated the theory and practice of arms control in the post Cold War world.

Two delegations were established, each representing the United States and the Russian governments. Members role-played representatives of the various agencies of government on each side. For the United States, the State Department, Defense Department, JCS, Department of Energy, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the intelligence community, Department of Commerce, and the U.S. Trade Representative were represented. On the Russian side, the Presidential Office, the Foreign Ministry, the Defense Ministry, the Ministry of Atomic Energy, the intelligence community, and an environmental group were portrayed. Colleen Casey and Bill Zapf, both seniors, headed the United States and Russian delegations, respectively.

After several weeks of theoretical discussion and individual and group preparation, the teams were ready. Six weeks of intensive negotiation followed with a plenary session followed by sometimes lengthy post-plenary discussions followed. Each member portrayed the biases, views, and needs of their agencies.

The two delegations explored the possibilities of a bilateral agreement in which the Russian side would increase its ability to secure its borders and prevent proliferation of nuclear weapons and the U.S. side would provide support. Finally, the two sides agreed to a statement of commitment which was signed at the final seminar session on December 8.

Dr. Burns, a retired general officer of the U.S. Army, said that he was highly satisfied with the performance of the group and expressed confidence that this type of education experience is extremely valuable for those who are contemplating a career in public service.

"La Salle graduates need take second place to no one when it comes to native ability and undergraduate preparation for a public service career," Burns said. "These students have proven themselves in a fairly realistic environment. Several are ready now for internships in Washington or graduate educational opportunities in schools of public affair."

University Mourns Deaths of Former Dean

Brother Francis J. McCormick, F.S.C., who served for more than 50 years as an administrator and teacher at La Salle University and La Salle College High School, died on Nov. 17 at De La Salle Hall, the Christian Brothers' Nursing Home in Lincroft, N.J. He was 92.

Brother McCormick celebrated his 77th anniversary as a Christian Brother last February and was the oldest living member of some 300 Christian Brothers comprising the Baltimore Province (Middle Atlantic area).

Brother McCormick retired from La Salle in 1984 after having served the university in a number of capacities including director of the annual fund, director of financial aid, an economics and theology professor, and religious superior of the Christian Brothers Community at La Salle.

In addition to serving as principal of La Salle College High School from 1932-36 and again from 1939-40, he taught and moderated a number of activities there when the high school was located on the same campus as the university.

Brother McCormick also was principal at St. John's High School, in Washington, D.C.; St. John's Elementary School, in Orange, N.J., and Hudson Catholic High School, in Jersey City, N.J. He was superintendent of the Philadelphia Catholic Protectory, and vice-principal at Philadelphia's West Catholic High School. He also taught at the University of Scranton and various elementary schools in Orange, N.J., and Baltimore.

A native of Philadelphia, Brother McCormick earned a bachelor's degree in economics (1928) and master's degree in theology (1953) from La Salle University. He also did graduate work in economics at the University of Pennsylvania and The Catholic University of America, in Washington, D.C.

A Mass of Resurrection was celebrated on Nov. 22 at the Christian Brothers' Chapel in Ammendale, Md. Burial was at the Christian Brothers' Cemetery, in Ammendale.

Brother James J. Muldoon, F.S.C., Ph.D., who served as dean of La Salle's School of Arts and Sciences for 17 years, died on New Years Day at De La Salle Hall, the Christian Brothers' Nursing Home in Lincroft, N.J. He was 61.

A Mass of Resurrection was celebrated at the La Salle University Chapel on Jan. 5. Burial was the following day at the Christian Brothers Cemetery, in Ammendale, Md.

At the Mass, Brother Jim, as he was known to his countless friends, was eulogized by Brother Emery Mollenhauer, the university's provost emeritus, as an "exceptionally able, indefatigable, and dedicated" dean.

"Not an ostentatiously religious person, Jim exemplified the belief that religion is not a matter of obeying rules but of influencing people," said Brother Emery. "He had great faith in the Province of God, and that faith was happily wedded to an abiding zeal for the work of the Lord. Moreover, as an administrator he gave reality to the concept of Lasallian values. He worked to give a kind of brotherly or family character to his school, a character that was sustained by an administrative style especially sensitive to the dignity of the individual person."

A native of Philadelphia and a member of the Christian Brothers for 41 years, Brother Muldoon joined La Salle's faculty in 1969. He was chairman of La Salle's Biology Department from 1972 until his appointment as dean in 1976. He retired in 1993. He received a Lindback Award for distinguished teaching in 1974.

As department chairman and an associate professor of biology, Brother Muldoon headed the university's Committee on Applications to the Health Professions, guiding hundreds of young men and women on the path to medical and dental schools and other careers in the health professions.

Brother Muldoon, who also held an R.N. in nursing from Philadelphia's St. Joseph's Hospital, was one of the moving forces behind the establishment of undergraduate and graduate nursing programs at La Salle. They have been so successful that a separate School of Nursing was established at the university in 1992.

In 1980, Brother Muldoon began the annual Holroyd Lecture and award ceremony honoring a distinguished alumnus in the health professions. The event is held to commemorate the memory of the late Dr. Roland Holroyd, professor emeritus and founder of the Biology Department at La Salle where he taught for 53 years.

Holroyd Lecturers at La Salle have included C. Everett Koop, former Surgeon General of the United States; Thomas E. Starzl, chief of surgery at the University of Pittsburgh Medical Center and a well-known pioneer in liver transplantation; Michael E. DeBakey, chancellor of Baylor College of Medicine who is noted for his treatment of cardiovascular diseases, and Otis Bowen, M.D., former U.S. Secretary of Health and Human Services, among others.

A 1957 magna-cum-laude graduate of La Salle University, Brother Muldoon earned a Ph.D. in molecular biology from Case Western-Reserve University in 1969. He taught science and mathematics at Philadelphia's La Salle High School (1959-64), Pittsburgh's Central Catholic High School (1966-67), and Cleveland's Cathedral Latin High School (1968-69).

Brother Muldoon was a member of the Philadelphia Archdiocesan Board of Education, Alpha Epsilon Alumni Honor Society, and Alpha Epsilon Delta undergraduate biology medical honor society.

Trustee Emeritus H. Blake Hayman, M.D., Dies

H. Blake Hayman, M.D., '41, a prominent Bucks County physician who is credited with delivering more than 50,000 babies, died of congestive heart failure on Nov. 21 at St. Joseph's Home, in Holland, Pa. He had lived in New Hope since 1969.

For many years Dr. Hayman conducted a private practice in obstetrics and gynecology in Levittown, Pa., building it into one of the largest such practices in the nation. He was one of the founding physicians of St. Mary Hospital, in Langhorne, Pa., where he also served as president of its medical staff, and Lower Bucks County Hospital, in Bristol, Pa.

Dr. Hayman was a major benefactor at La Salle University. He served as a member of its Board of Trustees from 1966 to 1974 and was awarded the President's Medal in 1964. Gerald T. Davis Honored at African American Alumni Reception

The 1995 Warren E. Smith, M.D. Award was presented to Gerald T. Davis, '63, public relations manager for ARCO Chemical Company, at the university's sixth annual African American Alumni Reception, on January 27 in the Union Ballroom, on campus.

The event kicked off La Salle's Black History Month celebration which also included a day-long festival on Feb. 5 featuring an appearance by author and poet Sonia Sanchez, a performance by "Spirit of Sankofa," an African dance and drum ensemble, and a Soul Food feast.

A native of Philadelphia, Davis was chosen for this honor because he is "an African American La Salle University graduate who has achieved success in his profession, demonstrated a commitment to traditional La Sallian values, made significant contributions to the community, and serves as an outstanding example to all La Salle students."

Davis has been employed by ARCO since 1973, advancing in various positions in public affairs and human resources in ARCO Chemical and other ARCO companies. He was named manager of public relations for ARCO Chemical Company in 1985.

Davis is active in many community and civic organizations including the Boys & Girls Clubs of Metropolitan Philadelphia, Baker Industries, a nonprofit corporation which hires the disabled and the homeless; the Committee for the Friends of the Library for the Blind and Physically Handicapped, and the West Catholic High School Development Committee.

In 1992 Davis was honored with the FBI Annual Leadership Award for the Philadelphia region and in 1993 he received the Community Service Award from ARCO Chemical Co.

La Salle's African American Alumni Reception is an annual event sponsored by the university's Alumni Association and African-American Students League. The event brings together current African American students with alumni and faculty to network, renew friendships and share information.

The award is named for the late Warren E. Smith, M.D., a 1954 La Salle graduate who had served for many years as a psychiatrist in the university's Counseling Center.

MARRIAGES: Janice Ciarelli to Keith Vogt; Marc Thomas Kaelin to Anette Veronica Skuder.

The following week a cocktail reception in honor of Brother President was held on the Gulf Coast of Florida at the "Rusty Pelican" in Tampa on January 25. Chuck Kilbride, '57, chaired the event which attracted some 30 alumni. Snow bird Frank Blatcher, '56, vacationing in Sarasota, dropped in. Frank was a member of the 1954 NCAA basketball championship team and is a former president of the Alumni Association.

The HOUSTON, Texas Club held a "Night at Sam Houston Race Park" on March 17. Dr. Lee Willames, '64, organized the event with the help of Marie Romanick Kucznski, '76, and Judy Valecce Waters, '82.

REUNION CLASSES of '50 through '70 are reminded to sign up for the two mile STICK WITH AL AND LA SALLE hiking tour of the campus on May 20. Participants will receive a 42" walking stick from Al Cantello, '55.

The expanded Alumni Association Cruise out of Miami on the S.S. Norway, from July 15-22, is sold-out.

REFLECTIONS OF THE PRESIDENT

1994-95 was a memorable year for many reasons, according to Brother Joseph Burke who is beginning his fourth year as La Salle's CEO.

A SPIRIT OF VOLUNTEERISM

From the Mississippi Delta to the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, many La Salle alumni are living examples of social justice.

1994-95 ATHLETIC ROUNDUP

Outstanding performances in swimming and track, a strong finish in women's basketball, and a dramatic comeback in men's soccer highlighted the year for the Explorers.

FROM "A" TO "Z"

Exciting things are happening at La Salle. So exhilarating, in fact, that we have a "Double A" to cheer about.

AROUND CAMPUS

The university held its 132nd commencement, hosted a special celebration commemorating the Vatican-Israeli Accord, and said good-bye to its popular literary magazine.

REUNION WEEKEND '95

More than 700 members of the alumni, their spouses, and guests celebrated a memorable return to campus in May.

The State of the University

A Year of Challenges and Accomplishments

By Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68

Brother Burke leads a Banner Parade through the campus during Charter Week festivities celebrating the university's 132nd anniversary on March 24.

Both good and bad events can make a particular year memorable. To say that all of us at La Salle will remember 1994-1995 is an understatement. On the one hand, we faced a serious financial problem resulting from lower than expected enrollment. On the other hand, the institution advanced on a number of important fronts. What follows is a synopsis of a year of momentous challenges and significant accomplishments.

The Challenges: For the past several years, the combined forces of demographics, the economy, and a decline in government support have resulted in serious enrollment difficulties for many private colleges and universities, particularly on the East Coast. At La Salle we saw gradual enrollment declines over the past few years, and as the 1994-1995 school year began we were beginning to initiate a number of critical changes that were the result of an intense study of our marketing, recruiting, and financial aid strategies. Unfortunately, the changes were too late to affect the incoming class of freshman and returning students, and as the school year began, we realized that we faced an unprecedented and unexpected enrollment shortfall.

In close cooperation with our Board of Trustees, we developed a plan to reduce expenditures in the current year, and to streamline the institution as we moved into fiscal 1995-1996. Since 60% of our expenses are in wages and benefits, it was apparent that we needed to reduce the size of our work force. By carefully restructuring the administration and implementing a voluntary buyout program for faculty, staff, and administration, we have been able to create a leaner and more efficient La Salle University. Through this process, which also included not filling a number of vacancies, 63 full-and-part-time administrative and staff positions were eliminated. Also, 11 faculty members

Dr. Joseph Kane, the university's new provost, shares a light moment with Dr. Lester Barenbaum, who has been serving as interim dean of the School of Business Administration.

Dr. Joseph A. Kane Appointed Provost

Dr. Joseph A. Kane, '56, former dean of the School of Business Administration who has been serving as interim provost for the past six months, has been appointed provost of the university, it was announced by La Salle's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D.

Kane, who has been with La Salle for 33 years, joined the faculty in 1961 as an economics instructor and presently holds the academic title of full professor. He founded the MBA program, served as Dean of the School of Business Administration for 10 years, and successfully led the university through the AACSB accreditation process.

In naming Dr. Kane to his new position, Brother Burke said, "His six months as interim provost have been marked by collaborative leadership and the emergence of a new vision of how we can maintain, enrich, and integrate the educational and social experiences of our students."

According to Dr. Kane it's time for La Salle to get "back to basics" in order to move ahead.

"I think we should recognize what our strengths are," he explained. "Where we have strong departments, strong areas and strong programs, we should try to support and build those. We need not make ourselves all things to all people, but to recognize our own strengths and weaknesses and try to focus on these strengths. We need to keep improving the quality of what we're doing. We will always have one constant, our La Sallian values, they are our foundation. They make us what we are."

Dr. Kane, a native of Philadelphia, received a master's degree in accounting and economics from St. Louis University and a Ph.D. in economics from Temple University. Prior to coming to La Salle, he served as an instructor on the faculty of economics and commerce, University of Lesotho, in South Africa.

He has published a book, Development Banking, and written several articles for publication in economic journals including Atlantic Economic Journal and Social and Economic Studies. In addition, Dr. Kane has served as a consultant to several social services agencies, the Pennsylvania Departments of Education and Transportation, as well as the Philadelphia Urban Coalition.

By Rosalie Lombardo accepted voluntary buyouts and an additional nine faculty positions were eliminated through retirements and non-renewals. The restructuring and pending reduction caused considerable uncertainty and distress, but it is worth noting that La Salle faculty, staff, and administration pulled together and kept top notch teaching and other services going throughout the troubling months of transition.

Accomplishments: Of course, you have already heard about some of our other major achievements this year. The new multi-million dollar, state-of-the-art Communication Center opened on South Campus, our U.S. News and World Report ranking as a top regional university improved even further, we received the coveted AACSB accreditation for the School of Business, we joined the Atlantic 10 Athletic Conference, and we are beginning to benefit from a $2.5 million federal grant for our Institute for the Advancement of Mathematics and Science Teaching and for the revitalization of science and math education on our campus.

I was once told that crisis creates opportunity, and the restructuring and streamlining of the university that took place this year was itself an accomplishment that will pay dividends in the future. In responding to our problems, we kept in mind that reducing the size of the operation was but one aspect of what needed to happen. Simultaneously, we needed to improve service to the La Salle Community. Although a number of important consolidations took place, perhaps the most noteworthy was the integration of "Student Affairs" with "Academic Affairs." In most colleges and universities, there are two vice presidential areas that are directly involved with students--academic Affairs which is focused on what takes place in the classroom, and Student Affairs which is focused on the social/developmental lives of our students. While both of these areas of the university have functioned well historically, I believed it was time to integrate our academic personnel (faculty, deans, and staff) with the professionals who serve our students outside the classroom (Resident Life, Student Life, Campus Ministry, Counseling Center, and Student Health Services). In March, all of what was called "Student Affairs" was moved directly under the Provost, and an exciting new model for the total education of our students is being developed.

"It now appears certain that next year's freshman class will be our largest in six years."

As alluded to earlier, for the past year or so we have been engaged in strategic planning. This has resulted in new approaches to marketing, recruiting students, and applying financial aid. At the time of this writing, it is evident that the changes we have made will have a very positive effect on next Fall's enrollment. While shifts in the expected number of freshmen and transfers can occur over the summer, it now appears certain that next year's freshman class will be our largest in six years.

But our planning efforts have been much more extensive than solely enrollment management. Three areas of our planning that I would like to highlight are our Catholic identity, our location, and the role of alumni.

The strategic planning process, as well as ongoing discussions among faculty and administrators, have helped us to bring our Catholic identity into greater focus. Although our campus enjoys a diversity of people of different religious backgrounds, the university seeks to foster in all of the members of our community an appreciation of the wealth of Catholic spirituality, worship, values, intellectual life, and social teachings. To be a "Catholic university" at the end of the 20th Century in the United States does not mean the same thing to everyone, but through dialogue and mutual respect we hope to foster a better understanding of our Catholic identity, as well as our identity as a Christian Brothers' university loyal to the charism of John Baptist De La Salle.

In terms of our location, we are an urban University with a decidedly un-urban campus. We remain committed to our Philadelphia location, in part because we continue to follow our mission to provide a superior education for students reflecting a broad socioeconomic background who best come together in an urban context. And, in part because Philadelphia is "our largest classroom." Philadelphia is an exciting business, cultural, and educational arena, and we increasingly provide our students with city-based internship and co-op experiences that broaden their education. Another aspect of this commitment is the opportunities that the city provides for community service. Last year more than 900 La Salle students were involved in community service, and the university continues to work closely with our immediate neighbors for the betterment of our larger community.

In terms of our alumni--now approaching 40,000 men and women--our new strategic plan puts our alumni and alumnae at the center of what we do. By next year, 100 of our graduates will be involved in working with our admissions staff in the recruiting of students, and alumni will be involved in a number of other new initiatives. Alumni chapters are sprouting up across the country in places like Washington, D.C., South Florida, Los Angeles, Northern Illinois, and New York. Special interest groups now flourishing include such graduates as Nursing, MBA, and African American alumni, among others. As a new Alumni Director comes onboard in the Fall, we will be forging a new relationship between our alumni and the university. Of course, we will continue to depend upon the financial help of our graduates, and this past year our alumni broke all previous records. The Fall edition of this magazine will provide details.

What's Next? There is always much more to be done. We have several important capital projects that need to be accomplished in the next several years including the closing of 20th street as well as the expansion and renovation of the Holroyd Science Center and Hayman Hall Athletic facility. Of course, the financial challenges associated with the cost of a college education are not going to disappear. We will need innovation, careful management of our resources, and the continuing support of our alumni and friends. Still, we have good reason for optimism, however cautious. We are a strong and resourceful institution, a community with a passion for continually transforming ourselves and our students through education.

Brother Burke has been serving as La Salle's 27th president since 1992. Previously he was the university's provost and vice president of the corporation and, before that, dean of the College of Basic Studies and special assistant to the president of the University of Hartford.

From the Mississippi Delta to the Pine Ridge Reservation in South Dakota, La Salle Alumni Volunteers are Living Examples of Social Justice

By Michelle Patterson

Kelly Burke's work as a Lasallian Volunteer has taken her from the Mississippi Delta to New York City.

Dan DeLuca, '94, teaches English at De La Salle Education Center, in Missouri. "The Kansas City School District deems our students to be beyond traditional instruction," he says, "in a word: uneducable. They come to DLS representing the spectrum of society's ills--highly volatile family and social problems, juvenile court referrals, teen pregnancy, drug and alcohol abuse. DLS is truly the last exit on a road leading to disaster."

Dan De Luca is a typical "real world example" that La Salle University's spirit of volunteerism extends far beyond the intersection of 20th Street and Olney Avenue. Each year the university graduates students from every academic major who choose to work in the volunteer sector, enhancing La Salle University's heritage throughout the nation and the world. Working as individuals for organizations with different missions, visions and values, these alumni are bound by a common desire to lay foundations for world peace and social justice.

Volunteerism is, in fact, central to the university's mission statement, which reads in part: "to prepare students for informed service and progressive leadership in their communities." To promote this mission, the Center for Community Learning was founded on campus last fall.

According to Rosemary Barbera, the center's director, its goals are to provide service opportunities to the La Salle community through projects geared toward social change; to challenge La Salle community members to overcome prejudices and stereotypical patterns of thought and behavior; and, to empower members of the La Salle community to think beyond the immediate environment and social climate in order to face tough issues of larger importance. Education and specific community-enhancement projects are the vehicles used to convey these messages.

Approximately 1,000 La Salle students participate in volunteer programs through the center each semester. After graduation, many of them find opportunities in the volunteer sector in places like Alaska, South Dakota, Mississippi, West Virginia and New York City. Their work touches every part of the globe including the Czech Republic, Japan, Nicaragua and Mexico.

In addition to Dan DeLuca, Vincent Guy, '94; Mike Kelly, '94, and Kelly Burke, '93, are just a few of the university's recent graduates who have dedicated their early career years to the volunteer movement. DeLuca and Burke are Lasallian Volunteers. Guy works for AmeriCorps, the national service movement described by some as the new domestic Peace Corps, and Kelly is a Red Cloud Volunteer, dedicated to the education of Sioux children in South Dakota.

Here are their stories.

Between October and November, 1994, Vincent Guy's mental video camera nearly overloaded. After recording endless footage of the aftermath of one of Mother Nature's latest temper tantrums—the floods of East Texas—Vincent realized he had previously been desensitized to the meaning of the word disaster. The sharpest image, he says, was a woman standing in her ruined home, freshly gutted by seven feet of water, watching her children, feet bare and noses running, play in piles of unsanitary debris.

"Disasters affect people's lives totally and completely," he says. "The devastation was overwhelming. The floods destroyed 10,000 homes and shattered hundreds of thousands of lives."

Guy's job as a specially trained Red Cross volunteer was to bring hot meals and cleaning supplies to flood ravished victims. The Red Cross selected him from a group of candidates already enrolled in AmeriCorps, a national service organization, developed under the Clinton administration, dedicated to community enhancement projects. AmeriCorps' unofficial motto—to get things done—is what initially drew Vincent to this particular organization.

Working with AmeriCorps for just under a year, Guy has already built a Therapeutic Riding and Recreation Center (TRRC), a horse-back-riding facility for mentally and physically challenged children, and launched a drug and alcohol prevention program, custom designed for children of low socioeconomic status.

Guy was involved with all aspects of the TRRC project, located in Western Maryland, from blazing horse trails to building, razing and painting the barn. Then he stuck around for a few weeks to give riding lessons to the center's first visitors.

Ironically, Guy never even thought about riding horses prior to his involvement with AmeriCorps and TRRC. "Before this I had never even been around horses," he explained.

Guy is now working with a team of AmeriCorps volunteers to conceptualize, develop, plan and implement substance-abuse, community-awareness campaigns in Bel Air, Md.

"Part of our job is to take the initiative to define our role," he explains. Especially exciting to Guy is the group's plan to incorporate a trust-building activity, similar to one he learned through the Boy Scouts, into an interactive, parent-child retreat. If their idea flies, a ropes course will be set up in a wooded area. Parent/child teams will navigate the obstacle course, which is constructed of rope and laced through the trees.

This activity is intended to build trust between teammates. The retreat will make it easier for parents and children to frankly discuss drug and alcohol issues.

Kelly Burke works through the Lasallian Volunteers in a program that unites college graduates with De La Salle Christian brothers who provide educational and human development services to the poor throughout the United States and in many parts of the world.

"Volunteering is not only about what you give, it's really about what you get," explains Burke. "You learn a lot that a nine-to-five job would never teach."

Burke is gaining an education about how people from different cultures with diverse backgrounds live, love and work. Plus, for the first time she is seeing herself through the eyes of other people. "It's definitely giving me a better understanding of myself," she says.

Now in her second year as a Lasallian Volunteer, Burke is stationed at Highbridge Community Life Center in the South Bronx section of New York City across the street from Yankee Stadium. The center makes HIV education, English-as-a-second-language classes, GED courses, and other adult education programming available to its immediate community. Burke's role, as public relations practitioner, centers on the fundraising campaigns that finance these programs as well as the production of publications that spread Highbridge's messages. She recently completed the community's first newsletter, an accomplishment she and her associates consider "groundbreaking."

"This newsletter is exciting because it is a means through which news about Highbridge can be shared with the foundations and donors who fund us," she explains.

Through her work, Kelly contributes to the solution of a community problem: the number of welfare recipients and recent immigrants living below poverty level in the South Bronx. Highbridge, dedicated to the solution, uses education to empower community members to work collectively to make their community safe, while encouraging individuals to strive toward self actualization.

At the same time, she is progressing in her own professional development. The capital campaign management and public relations skills she develops will serve her well when she leaves the volunteer sector to work in a non-profit setting.

"When I was in college and decided to work for the poor, my friends, who were sending resumes to accounting firms, didn't understand why I would want to do this type of work," explains Burke. "Living among the religious is supportive. These people understand why I want to do this."

Burke's first year as a Lasallian Volunteer found her teaching at St. Joseph High School, the only integrated non-public school in Greenville, Mississippi, a town with one of the highest per-capita crime rates in the nation.

"As a volunteer, it was tough to know if you were making a difference," Burke recalls. "Lesson plans fail, kids often don't take you seriously as a teacher and disciplinarian, and the average test scores lie somewhere in the 60s."

Yet, there were also the good days—like Homecoming when 15 seniors in her speech class collected their lunch money to present her with a corsage. Or the day when Burke's worst discipline problem handed her a ceramic yellow star, a Christmas tree ornament he made in art class "for his favorite teacher." Or the day when Lori Gregory stopped her in the hallway and said, "Miss Burke, I didn't realize how much speech class helped me until I tried out for the senior play." Lori won the part as the female lead in Jesus Christ Superstar.

Or the time when one of Burke's eighth-graders told her, "We need more volunteers because y'all understand us better."

All of the La Salle alumni interviewed for this article have had experiences similar to Kelly Burke and agree that the nature of volunteer work mandates the establishment of trusting, nurturing relationships. They've all felt the pain of being viewed as "outsiders" and have often been misunderstood.

Such was the experience of Mike Kelly, whose volunteer work took him to South Dakota as a member of Red Cloud Volunteers, an organization that places teachers in one of three schools dedicated to educating the Lakota (Sioux) children on the Pine Ridge Reservation, teaching geography, American government, European history, and psychology. Then, after his teaching day is over, he drives students home in the school bus.

"I had to get a special license to drive it," he laughs, admitting that it is actually one of the most enjoyable parts of the day because it gives him an opportunity to get to know the students on a different level.

Before departing for South Dakota, Mike's anxiety was high. Questions ran through his mind: Would he see himself as a professional teacher? Would the students respect him as an educator?

"I was worried about that, because I'm fresh out of college," he explains.

Months into his assignment, Mike's answer to both questions, thankfully, is yes. Unfortunately, the answer came after a sucker-punch to the mouth.

Not long after arriving in South Dakota, Mike, demonstrated his newly acquired bus-driving skills by driving a group of student basketball fans to a nearby game. All was well until half time. As the buzzer sounded, a fight broke out between some high school girls from the other school. Taking charge, Mike stopped the fight.

"Unfortunately, I got clocked in the face in the process," he says. "Every kid there was saying I had been beat up by a girl." The high school students spread the story throughout the school the next day: "Mr. Kelly was decked by a girl." The ability to endure the teasing with a sense of humor proved to the students that he was "OK."

Mike has also been a regular guest at traditional Native American ceremonies. In fact, during a "sweat," a religious ceremony the Sioux Indians use as an arena in which to express their deep sense of community, Mike was even offered the peace pipe.

"Sweats are sacred," he says. "I was very honored to be included."

Respected and valued for his contributions to the educational development of the Sioux children, Mike knows that he has benefitted considerably through personal fulfillment as a Red Cloud Volunteer.

"I wanted to do something not just good, but meaningful and worthwhile before I went out and got a real job," he explains. "I knew I wanted to teach and I've always been interested in the American Indian culture."

As Dan DeLuca says from his classroom for "some of the neediest children in our society" in Kansas City: "The reason volunteering was and remains so enticing to me is that it's the strongest dose of reality possible. I'm not helping someone get into a better college. I'm helping their survival!"

Farewell to the MCC

Outstanding Performances in Swimming and Track, a Strong Finish in Women's Basketball, and a Dramatic Comeback in Men's Soccer Highlighted 1994-95 for Explorer Athletes

*By Bob Vetrone
Assistant Sports Information Director*

As the sun began to set in the Cleveland twilight, so did La Salle's short visit to the Midwestern Collegiate Conference.

On May 12, when the Explorers' softball team fell to the University of Detroit Titans, 2-0, for their second loss in the Midwestern Collegiate Conference double-elimination tournament, La Salle said farewell to a relationship that began with much hope on December 19, 1992, but finally evaporated, just several weeks before, with La Salle's long hoped-for entrance into the Atlantic 10 on Feb. 9, 1995.

The exit from the softball tournament, in which La Salle senior hurler Heather Sudul defeated the host Cleveland State Vikings, 2-1, in the Explorers' opener, marked the final athletic competition in what had become, for the Explorers, a sprawling and cumbersome MCC.

But before that farewell, La Salle went through its third MCC season with just about the same results as previously.

The men's swim team won its third straight MCC championship and the women came in fourth in the 10-team field. Coach John Lyons also made off with his third consecutive Coach of the Year award.

In the meet at Notre Dame, La Salle men piled up 642.5 points to Wright State's 596 and Notre Dame's 506.

The men also took first in the Philadelphia Open Invitational, and second in the ECAC's. The women were second in the Philadelphia meet.

Freshman track standout Rachel Ritz and coach Charles Torpey also came in for MCC honors. Ritz was voted the Outstanding Women's Performer and Outstanding Women's Newcomer. She captured the 55-meter dash (7.28), the 200 meters (25.94) and anchored the mile relay team to a second-place finish, as the women's team finished runner-up to Notre Dame. The honors were topped off with the naming of Torpey as the MCC Coach of the Year.

Gregg McIntyre shattered a long-standing La Salle pole vault record on April 8 at the Penn Invitational when he leaped 16 feet, 4 inches. The jump was significant since the record he erased belonged to La Salle Hall of Athletes honoree John Uelses. Uelses' record of 16' 3" had held up since then but McIntyre's effort was another sign of the improving field strength under the tutelage of assistant coach "Moon" Mondschein, himself an 1948 Olympic high jumper.

In cross-country, Pete Dougherty's seventh-place finish helped the Explorers to take third place in the MCC championships.

The women's basketball team, which handed powerful Notre Dame its only conference loss, made it all the way to the MCC tournament championship game, and lost an overtime heartbreaker to Northern Illinois, the host team.

To get that far in the MCC tourney, La Salle had to defeat Cleveland State in a tournament play-in game, then knock out Illinois-Chicago and Detroit before its tense, losing struggle with Northern Illinois.

"The tournament capped off a very exciting season for us," said coach John Miller. "We were playing very well toward the end of the season and it carried over into the tournament."

That the title game went into overtime was one of those quirks of fortune that usually is associated with teams destined for good things.

Trailing by three as the clock was running down toward zero, Miller called a timeout, and only then, made up a play that would give sophomore Marnie McBreen a three-point shot.

With about 2.5 seconds showing on the clock, McBreen hit a three-pointer and that meant overtime. Again, the Explorers played tough but the Huskies pulled out the 80-77 victory and earned the NCAA berth.

Ironically, Northern Illinois drew as its first-round NCAA opponent, the region's number one seed, Vanderbilt, coached by former St. Joseph's coach and longtime Miller buddy, Jim Foster.

Now, coming off the 20-10 season, Miller can look forward to a team loaded with experience (there were no seniors on the 1994-95 squad) and two key newcomers — Carrie Jewett (Circle Pines, MN) and Jacki Wlodarczyk (St. Hubert's, Philadelphia)

Could there possibly be too many good players vying for playing time?

"I'm a firm believer that chemistry on a team is a very underrated factor and it will be up to our players to make sure it doesn't become a problem," Miller said. "Knowing the tremendous character of the players, I'm confident we can attain this chemistry because of the high quality of our people."

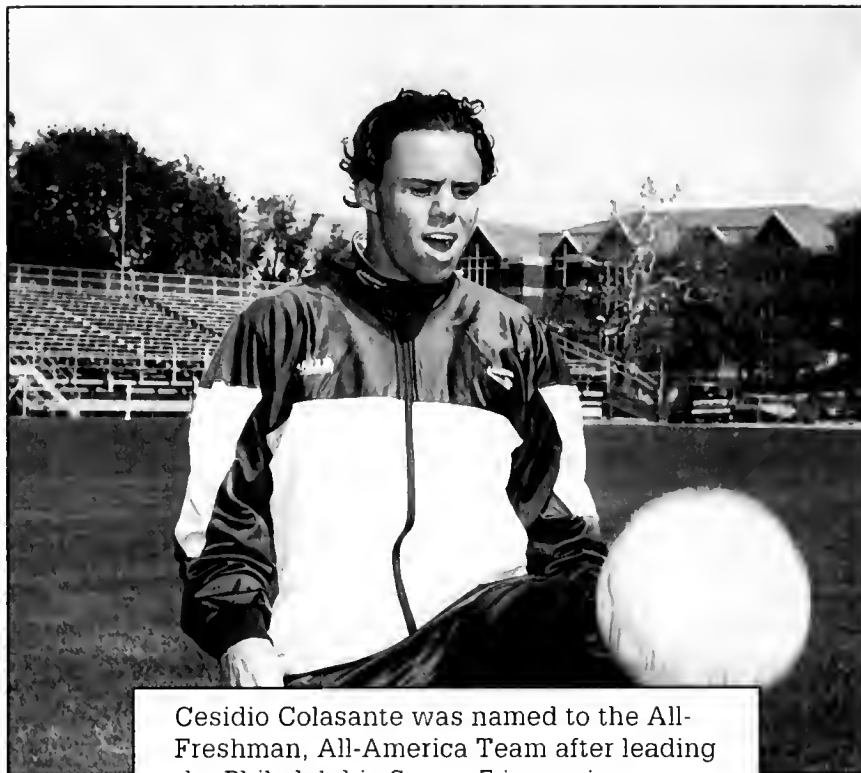

Like 16 other La Salle squads, Miller's team heads into the Atlantic 10, the ninth highest-rated women's basketball conference in the nation.

"It presents a brand new challenge but our players have always risen to those kinds of challenge. Our players are really looking forward to it."

And leaving the Midwestern Collegiate Conference?

"People on the East Coast do not realize how great the competition was in the MCC," Miller said, "just as I didn't realize it until we got into it. I was surprised how difficult the conference was."

Individually, honors went mainly to Chrissie Donahue, the sophomore from Cardinal O'Hara in suburban Philadelphia. She was chosen the Philadelphia Big 5 Player of the Year, becoming only the second Explorer woman to achieve that honor. Jenn Cole, La Salle's Academic All-American from the Class of '93, did it as a junior.

Cesidio Colasante was named to the All-Freshman, All-America Team after leading the Philadelphia Soccer 7 in scoring.

Donahue, who averaged 18.8 points, 8.3 rebounds, 2.8 assists and 2.5 steals per game in 30 games, also made the All-MCC Tournament team, along with junior Lori Sparling. Donahue also was honored as the Big 5 Player of the Week four times, and the MCC "Player" twice.

There were other highlights, team-wise and individually.

Start with men's soccer and let's talk low to high. Pat Farrell's booters had a 1-16-2 record in 1993, then, behind a remarkable first year for Cesidio Colasante and the experienced play of veterans Kevin Gerry, Dave Steinbach and Joe Veneziale, the Explorers vaulted to an 11-7 record before bowing out in the first round of the MCC Tournament.

Colasante's 47 points on 18 goals and 11 assists helped him reap in numerous honors, including a berth on the All-Freshman All-America Team, the All-Philadelphia

Soccer 7 squad, and recognition as the Soccer 7 Newcomer of the Year, while leading the group in scoring.

Farrell joined the list of La Salle coaches who earned recognition throughout the midwest when he was voted the MCC and Soccer 7 Coach of the Year.

The women's soccer season had some high points and would have had many more, had the team performed all season as it did in the early going of the season opener and the final 10 minutes of its closing game.

Opening at Notre Dame, the Explorers held the nationally-ranked Irish to a 1-0 halftime lead before sheer numbers overcame them. Then, Craig Dorman's team bounced back the next day to defeat Loyola Chicago, 2-1.

That first half at Notre Dame was a "high" and probably the "next highest" came on a rainy, windswept Wright State field in the play-in game of the MCC Tournament.

The home team Raiders built a 2-0 lead, which proved to be insurmountable, but in the final 10 minutes, La Salle scored on Ashley Golden's goal and threatened several more times only to fall short in a gallant effort.

Unfortunately, nagging injuries to key players kept the team from performing up to that level much of the season.

Co-captain Erin Able led the scoring with four goals, and Gabriella Parrino had three goals and two assists. Senior goalkeeper Chris Raub had 162 saves for an 81% save percentage.

Men's basketball experienced a dose of déjà vu, which means it started strongly, as in 1993-94, then weakened in the face of strong opposition in the form of top-10 teams such as Arizona, Maryland and Massachusetts.

The lack of depth and inside strength told in each of those three games, with the Explorers more than keeping pace in the first half, only to wilt after intermission.

Victories in early-season tournaments at Waco, Texas and San Francisco, carried "Speedy" Morris' hopefuls to a 5-0 start. And when mid-January rolled around, their record still was an admirable 8-3, with the losses coming to the aforementioned Top 10 trio.

Then, as in the previous season, hard-luck losses struck and, before long, it was a battle to stay at .500. A first-round loss to Wisconsin-Green Bay in the MCC Tournament pushed the Explorers to 13-14 and a below .500 mark for the second consecutive season.

The season did produce some lofty achievements, notably a 52-point performance by tri-captain Kareem Townes. On Feb. 4, in a Civic Center victory over Loyola Chicago, the senior guard from South Philadelphia High poured in 52 points, the most ever for a La Salle player and the highest by any Big 5 player since that group was formed in 1955-56.

Townes and fellow backcourt mate Paul Burke sparkled throughout the season. Townes finished his career with 1,925 points, the fifth highest in school history and the highest for a three-year player. Burke, who took to the baseball diamond soon after basketball ended, proved a steadying influence throughout and wound up with 1,015 career points.

Townes, who finished sixth in the country in scoring with his 25.9 per-game average, earned MCC Player of the Week honors three times, was voted to the All-MCC Team, and the Philadelphia Big 5 first team. Burke was second team both in the MCC and the Big 5.

Talk about topsy-turvy seasons, check out baseball. Gene McDonnell's team lost 17 of its first 19 games, then rallied to a 21-29 record. Its MCC mark of 7-7 appeared good enough to make the conference tournament at Notre Dame.

But just days before the clinching of that spot, it was revealed that an Explorer pitcher was in his fifth season (one at another school and four at La Salle), making him ineligible and forcing La Salle to forfeit two conference games.

When Xavier split a four-game weekend series with Wright State, it vaulted the Musketeers past the Explorers and into the tournament.

"Devastating to our players and to me," is how McDonnell described the feelings of his team that had improved immensely as the season wore on.

For its future in the Atlantic 10, there is high hope if McDonnell can replenish the pitching staff that lost several of its key starters by graduation. No position players were lost and several of the underclassmen reached or approached stardom.

Junior Chris Seiler proved to be the most versatile. Playing the infield, pitching and occasionally used as the Designated Hitter, Seiler posted a 4-0 record and had seven saves as a pitcher, with an Earned Run Average of 2.82.

As a hitter, he hit six homers, including two grand slams. In fact, he and Burke each hit grand slams in the first inning of a game against the University of Detroit, sparking a 10-run outburst. But, alas, the pitching couldn't hold that lead and the Titans, coached by 1950 Phillies' Whiz Kid righthander Bob Miller, pulled out a 17-11 victory.

Other statistical leaders included sophomore first baseman-designated hitter Bob Carr with a .361 batting average, sophomore outfielder Brett Lovelidge with 38 runs batted in, and sophomore Brian Schaller with seven homers, 73 hits, 51 runs scored and 24 stolen bases (in 30 attempts).

Although missing 13 games, shortstop Burke hit .300, drove in 32 runs, smacked six homers and led in slugging percentage (.547). Other .300 hitters among the regulars included sophomore infielder Bob Ball (.313), freshman outfielder Barry Lopoten (.312), Schaller (.351).

Other solid contributors were junior catcher-DH Mike Hartman, with a .298 average, 34 RBIs, three homers and 10 doubles, and sophomore catcher Steve Tomasco at .287, 24 runs driven across and three homers.

Softball posted a 26-35 record, several times showing the wear and tear of traveling through the MCC and a tough schedule against local and Eastern opponents.

Sudul was the lone senior on the roster, giving coach Ray Perri considerable hope that the returning players will be ready for the Atlantic 10.

Sudul's 3.17 Earned Run Average led the team's pitchers, while posting 11 victories. Sophomore Lori Congdon showed vast improve-

Another Outstanding Year in the Classroom For Student-Athletes

As usual, the academic performances of La Salle's student-athletes were as admirable as their achievements on the playing field in 1994-95.

When the spring semester returns were in, some 33.5% of the approximately 400 student-athletes had achieved career cumulative averages of 3.00 or better (on a scale of 4.0). Close to 15% of La Salle's athletes made the Dean's List with marks of 3.4 or higher.

For the spring semester alone, almost 40% were above 3.00, and about 20% made the Dean's List.

As Joseph Gillespie, director of academic support services for student-athletes, put it: "This is still another year that demonstrates that the La Salle student-athletes can combine the two phases of their intercollegiate life on high levels. It also demonstrates the commitment made by the entire university community. The outstanding academic achievements of the La Salle University student-athletes shouldn't be a surprise anymore to anyone."

ment and finished with a team-leading 12 wins.

Three softballers hit over .300 and, with all coming back, the team's offense should pick up. Freshman first baseman Chris Wilderman's .309 average and 30 runs batted in were leaders. Sophomores Kristen Biddle (.304) and Margaret Hammond (.302) followed right behind.

Sudul showed her versatility by driving in 24 runs, giving her the runner-up position behind Wilderman.

A big moment for the team and Biddle came on April 11, in the Explorers' 8-7 come-from-behind victory over Monmouth. La Salle had fallen behind, 7-0, after two innings. Biddle hit a grand slam in the sixth to help cut the deficit to 7-6. With one out in the seventh, she ended the game with a two-run homer. Those two homers, coming in her 73rd game for the Explorers, remain the only two she has hit in her 94-game career.

On the water, the La Salle Invitational Regatta continued to grow in this, its seventh year. A total of 40 crews competed on April 8 on the Cooper River in Camden County Park (NJ), and through the stellar promotional work of the staff, it is expected to grow each year.

The men's and women's varsity light eights came through with victories to help capture the Charleston Invitational title. The women's varsity light also took a first at the Virginia Crew Classic and the men's novice four scored a first in the La Salle Invitational.

The men's varsity light eight sped across the finish line in first place in the Kerr Cup, a race on the Schuylkill for Philadelphia colleges, then capped its season with a fifth place in the prestigious Dad Vail.

In wrestling, coach Ed Lawless' grapplers, with only one senior on the ten man roster, were 6-6 in dual matches, with Rod Jefferson, Rich Nepomuceno and Tim Steinmetz helping forge that .500 mark.

The field hockey team under coach Kathy De Angelis took on all comers, with six of their first 10 opponents nationally ranked. Sweeper Renae Rutigliano, one of four seniors, brought honor to the team by being named a Robbins/ECAC Scholar Athlete and making the National Academic Squad. Junior Amy Aontelli led in scoring for the second year in a row with six goals and three assists. Sophomore goalie Dori Shumadine recorded 265 saves for a percentage of 85.8.

The golfers of Joe Boyle, behind Paul Rambo's 77, took 10th place in the ECAC. . . George Mecherly's men's tennis team continued an upward surge with a 12-7 mark, and Marc Mejia was voted the squad's MVP. Freshman Ed Colfer had a 13-4 mark, while Anthony Russo and Richard Wilhelm were 12-7. . . Women's tennis chalked up a 5-8 record, led by # 2 singles performer Jeanne Montana, who had an 8-5 record. .

The volleyball team suffered through a 15-match losing streak after an opening 3-0 win over Wagner in the Seton Hall Tournament. Freshman Megan McCulty was a shining light, leading in digs (347), kills (203) and aces (43).

In addition to coaches earning individual honors, three reached milestones in their careers.

Kareem Townes broke the La Salle and Big Five single-game scoring record with 52 points against Loyola (Chicago).

When La Salle defeated Baylor in the Dr Pepper Classic on Dec. 4, it marked the 600th win for men's basketball coach "Speedy" Morris in his high school and college career.

Baseball coach Gene McDonnell made it 500 victories at La Salle when the Explorers downed West Chester on April 12. On April 9, the softball team defeated West Chester and gave coach Ray Perri his 100th triumph in less than four seasons.

In one of the most successful promotions in its history, the Philadelphia Big 5, through the efforts of executive secretary Dan Baker and the Philadelphia Daily News, conducted a poll to determine the all-time Big 5 team, covering the time from its inception in 1955-56.

Of the 10 players selected, four were from La Salle, and 1990 Player of the Year Lionel Simmons was voted the Outstanding Player.

On the night the team was honored at the Palestra, Simmons was unable to attend since he was on the road with the Sacramento Kings. His award was accepted by another former La Salle Player of the Year, Tom Gola, '55. In fact, had he been eligible (TG played prior to the Big 5), Gola certainly would have been a candidate for the top player award.

Other Explorers to make that "Big 5 Dream Team" were Ken Durrett, Larry Cannon and Michael Brooks. Durrett and Cannon made it to the heart-warming homecoming ceremony. Brooks is playing professionally in France.

Prior to the game, the 1995 Big 5 Hall of Fame inductions were made and among the new members was La Salle's Tim Legler, '88, who soon after joined the NBA Golden State Warriors.

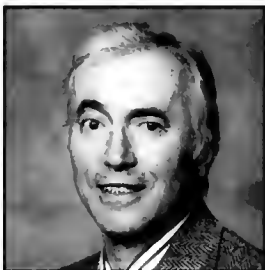

Colleen Corace, La Salle's assistant sports information director, contributed to this article.

AACSB- La Salle is among only 311 elite institutions out of more than 1,200 Business Programs in the nation fully accredited by the American Assembly of Collegiate Schools of Business.

A₁₀- The Explorers will begin competition in the prestigious Atlantic 10 Conference in 17 men's and women's sports in 1995-96.

BUCKS- The university's campus site at Bucks County Community College, in Newtown, Pa., enrolled almost 200 students for graduate and undergraduate courses in 1994-95.

COMMUNICATION Center, which opened this year on the South Campus, houses the undergraduate and graduate Communication Departments and contains some of the most sophisticated, high-tech equipment in the nation.

DORAN- The university has been named beneficiary of a $399,480 endowment for scholarship aid, named the Dr. Paul and Catherine E. Doran Memorial Fund, for students majoring in English.

EASTERN European Studies Program graduated its first three master's degree candidates at the university's recent commencement.

FULBRIGHT Scholars- La Salle graduates have won 47 Fulbright Scholarships, one of the highest number of such awards generated by an institution on the East Coast.

GRADUATION Rate- According to the latest NCAA figures, La Salle ranks fifth nationally among Division I schools with a 94% rate of student-athletes who entered in 1987-88.

HONORS Program- The Newsletter of the National Collegiate Honors Council describes La Salle's program as "a very special sort not available to larger, general universities."

INSTITUTE for the Advancement of Mathematics and Science Teaching is beginning to receive the benefits of the $2.5 million federal grant that will revitalize science and math education on campus.

JOSEPH G. Markmann Alumni Professor of Accounting Scott E. Stickel has become a highly sought-after regular on the Wall Street money manager/financial executive lecture circuit. He recently made presentations at the University of Chicago and to the American Finance Association.

KELLY, Geoffrey B., director of the university's Graduate Religion programs, received an honorary doctorate from Chicago's North Park College, in recognition of his outstanding research on the theology of Dietrich Bonhoeffer, the martyr of the German Resistance movement against Adolf Hitler and Nazism.

LYDON, Christopher, our new undergraduate admissions director, predicts a class of between 720 and 730 freshmen in September, which will exceed even the most optimistic projections.

MC PHILLIPS, Thomas H., F.S.C., is returning to our Biology Department after spending a year teaching at Bethlehem University in the Holy Land.

So exhilarating, in fact, that we have a "Double A" to cheer about.

Neighborhood Nursing Center – Funded by grants from the Independence Foundation, U.S. Department of Health and Human Services, and City of Philadelphia, La Salle operates one of the few university-based neighborhood nursing centers in the nation.

Olney Hall will be celebrating its silver anniversary in 1995-96 as the first campus building to be utilized completely for classrooms and faculty offices.

Peale House- the site of the President's Office on the Belfield Estate is believed to be the nation's second-oldest surviving campus building.

Quality education is a matter of people at La Salle which maintains the tradition of teaching excellence fostered by the Christian Brothers who founded the institution in 1863.

Richard, James T., professor of psychology at Bucks County Community College and president of the Newtown Psychological Centre, received the first annual John P. Dondero Award as the alumnus who exemplifies the devotion of the university's late psychology professor in making the science and practice accessible to others in their search for humanistically and spiritually-directed lives.

Shalhoub, George M., chairman of the Chemistry/ Biochemistry Department, is this year's recipient of the Christian R. and Mary F. Lindback Award for distinguished teaching.

Transfer student enrollment is expected to increase from 10 to 15 per cent over a year ago.

University Status was granted to La Salle in 1984.

Volunteer Service is becoming a major component of the educational experience at La Salle with the recent establishment of the Center for Community Learning.

Wister- The university's Fine Arts Studio on the Belfield Estate has been renamed in honor of Mary and Frances Wister, a pair of distinguished Philadelphians who were born in the building which was built in 1868.

Xplorers—La Salle's nickname was erroneously bestowed by a sportswriter covering a football game (yes, we did play on the gridiron from 1931-41) on campus during the 1930s. He thought that the institution was named after the famous French explorer instead of St. John Baptist de La Salle, the founder of the Brothers of the Christian Schools, a lay religious order dedicated to teaching.

Young Alumni-will be holding their seventh annual "Beach Party" on August 26 at the Princeton Inn, in Avalon, N.J., with full expectations of exceeding last year's record-breaking turnout of 686 fun-loving people.

Zoology- A course in Invertebrate Zoology is offered as part of La Salle's highly-respected Biology Program. More than 90% of all students recommended by the university have been admitted into medical schools.

Former Commander of Philadelphia Naval Base Honored at La Salle's 132nd Commencement

Rear Admiral Louise C. Wilmot, USN (Ret.), deputy executive director of Catholic Relief Services and former commander of the U.S. Naval Base in Philadelphia, was praised for "her dedication, deep faith, and devotion to duty" as she received an honorary doctor of humane letters degree at the university's 132nd commencement on May 14 at Philadelphia's Civic Center Convention Hall.

La Salle's Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., conferred a total of 1,057 undergraduate and graduate degrees. Bachelor's degrees were conferred on 790 men and women including 154 part-time students from the School of Continuing Studies.

Another 267 graduates received master's degrees. They include 137 in business administration, 26 in education, 24 in nursing, 22 in psychology, 21 in pastoral counseling, 17 in bilingual bicultural studies, 17 in religion, and the university's first three graduates in Eastern European studies.

Mrs. Wilmot was sponsored for her honorary degree by Major General William F. Burns, USA (Ret.), former director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency and a member of the university's Board of Trustees.

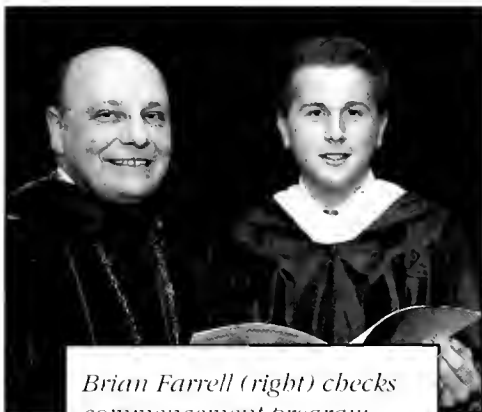

"Admiral Wilmot continues her career of service to the church, the American people, and the deprived of the world," said General Burns in presenting her for the honorary degree. "Her dedication, her deep faith, and her devotion to duty are pronounced. She has truly signed up to serve."

Mrs. Wilmot was serving as the highest ranking woman in the U.S. Navy when she retired from the service to join Catholic Relief Services last September. Appointed deputy executive director for domestic outreach, she oversees all domestic programming for CRS which is one of the largest international relief and development agencies in the world. With an annual budget of $300 million, CRS operates in more than 75 countries.

General Burns recalled how he was "personally heartened in Moscow three years ago when a Russian official gratefully pointed out to me an old Soviet Army truck with the Papal Arms on the door, saying that American Catholic Relief is truly unselfish—it is simply to help the Russian people."

Mrs. Wilmot served in the Navy for 30 years, most recently as commander of the U.S. Naval Base in Philadelphia.

ized her final assignment as "the toughest job the Navy has ever given a woman—the closing of a major facility."

While on active duty, Admiral Wilmot was the highest decorated woman in the Navy. She received the Navy Distinguished Service Medal, the Defense Superior Service Medal, the Legion of Merit (with three gold stars), the Meritorious Service Medal, and the Joint Service Commendations Medal.

Mrs. Wilmot is a 1964 graduate of the College of Saint Elizabeth (N.J.). She graduated from the Naval War College, in Newport, R.I., in 1977 and earned a master's degree from George Washington University. She lives in Baltimore, Md., with her husband, James.

General Burns recalled that Mrs. Wilmot "entered the Navy when it was a struggle for any woman to achieve high rank in the American military service. She succeeded in her chosen career through hard work, application to duty, and strength of character."

La Salle's annual Baccalaureate Liturgy was celebrated on May 13 at the Cathedral Basilica of SS. Peter and Paul, on the Benjamin Franklin Parkway in Philadelphia.

A Never-Ending Process of Self-Discovery and Advancement"

The student speaker at La Salle's 132nd commencement told his 1,056 fellow graduates that he never expected the "magnitude of personal growth and depth of relationships" that he was able to experience and establish during his days at the university.

"Life is a never-ending process of self-discovery and advancement, questioning and re-questioning, finding the answers and finding the arguments that will refute the answers," said Brian W. Farrell, a Dean's List dual major in communications/English.

Farrell, an Honors Program member from Morrisville, Pa., added that life also is "recognizing its dynamic nature and identifying those elements that will forever be constant—namely family and friends who support individual development."

La Salle's collegiate setting, Farrell explained, provides one of the most conducive atmospheres to achieve these ends. La Salle's students also enjoy a taste of what the world should really be like.

"As educated people, it is now our responsibility, our charge to work toward making the necessary changes that will expand and eventually eliminate the boundaries that restrict humanity. We have been raised in or lived with the problems that plague society. The tools to overcome these have been given to us. How we respond to them is entirely our own choice."

Graduation Day, Farrell added, "is a time of celebration, commemoration, and anticipation. It is a day filled with the joy of accomplishment and the sadness of departure as we complete a part of our lives that has, for so many years, been a driving force and goal.

"Let us be thankful for the opportunities we have been given, the relationships we have developed, and most importantly the support that has been shown us."

Former Philadelphia Police Inspector Robert P. Levins has been named director of security and safety at the university. A member of the Philadelphia Police Department for 31 years, Levins was commanding officer of the Internal Affairs Division when he retired earlier this year. A U.S. Marine veteran, he is a graduate of Community College of Philadelphia and the FBI National Academy.

La Salle Among Consortium Awarded $999,271 Federal Grant to Support Education and Business Development in Ukraine

Andrew Lamas is the new director of the university's Small Business Development Center.

La Salle University and a consortium of educational institutions have been awarded $999,271 to establish long-term, educational training partnerships with Ukrainian institutions in the regions of Lviv and Donetsk.

The grant is funded by the United States Agency for International Development (USAID) through the Institutional Partnership Program for the Newly Independent States administered by the International Research and Exchange Board (IREX). The local consortium includes Drexel and Temple Universities and University of Pennsylvania. Also participating are Bryn Mawr College, Delaware State University, and Lincoln University.

As part of a variety of educational initiatives during the next two years, La Salle will coordinate a cultural immersion project for all Ukrainian faculty, administrators, and students visiting the consortium's participating Philadelphia institutions. Assisting in this project will be La Salle's School of Business Administration and the university's Central & Eastern European Studies program.

In addition, La Salle's School of Business will manage international exchange, mentoring, and consulting programs focused on curriculum development, faculty training, and small business development. Opportunities for faculty and student travel will be offered.

The grant will also fund the establishment of videoconferencing centers in Philadelphia and Ukraine to provide live, interactive business and other consulting services among American and Ukrainian technology firms, university faculty, venture capitalists, corporate managers, and entrepreneurs.

La Salle's provost, Dr. Joseph Kane, said that the grant is much more significant than typical international educational exchange programs.

"Not only will our faculty be assisting in the development of Ukraine's first business schools," explained Dr. Kane, "By developing curriculums, training faculty, and promoting privatization, we will be laying foundation stones of a new, dynamic economic system and educating the first wave of Ukrainian entrepreneurs and managers in their post-communist society."

"Ukrainian business leaders and professors have sought our assistance in supporting their country's political and economic reforms," explained Dr. James Kelly, associate professor of finance and co-director of the La Salle-Ukraine Program. "We are committed to providing training in finance, international marketing, and other areas to strengthen businesses and private institutions in this emerging market economy."

"But, most importantly, we will be contributing to the evolution of democracy in Ukraine and Eastern Europe," said Dr. Leo Rudnytsky, professor of foreign languages at La Salle who will serve as a primary consultant to the cultural immersion project for visiting Ukrainians.

In addition to teaching Ukrainian language and cultural studies, translating important Ukrainian poets and authors, producing a documentary film on the Ukrainian-American community, and engaging in a variety of other related pursuits, Dr. Rudnytsky arranged for Ukraine's first President Leonid M. Kravchuk to receive an honorary degree at La Salle's 1992 commencement.

For further information about the La Salle-Ukraine Project, please contact Dr. Kelly at (215) 951-1044 or Andrew Lamas, who was recently appointed director of the university's Small Business Development Center, at 951-1416.

Another Literary Magazine Passes as Four Quarters Stops Publishing

John Keenan

La Salle University's 44-year old internationally circulated literary magazine, Four Quarters, suspended publication with the Spring, 1995 issue which was distributed in April.

Citing "budgetary limitations" in his letter to the editor, John Keenan, editor of Four Quarters, Provost Joseph Kane expressed hope "that publication may be reinstituted at some time in the future."

Founded in 1951 by a small group of La Salle faculty, Four Quarters is one of the nation's oldest literary magazines. Although sponsored by the faculty, the magazine has always published outside contributors from all over the world, including John F. Kennedy, William Stafford, Joyce Carol Oates, Alan Paton, and Seamus Heaney, to name a few.

"I appreciate the University's long-standing commitment over nearly half a century," Keenan said. "I'm sorry to see it end. I like to think we have contributed to the Great Conversation that consists of writers re-creating their world in art. I hope some bright new editor will revive the magazine in the future."

Keenan, 52, a prominent author and frequent contributor to LA SALLE magazine, retired in May to pursue his own writing.

Diplomat-In-Residence Program Commemorates 50th Anniversary of the United Nations

Diplomats from seven nations including China and Russia participated in the university's Diplomat-In-Residence program marking "50 Years of the UN" last March on campus.

Pictured with Cornelia Tsakiridou (right), assistant professor of philosophy and coordinator of the DIR program, were (sitting, from left): Ambassador Yuri Fedotov of Russia, and Colonel Mark Walsh, U.S. Army Peacekeeping Institute. Standing (from left): Ambassadors Xue Xian Wang, of China, and Karl Inderfurth, of the U.S. Mission.

The diplomats discussed "The UN in the Twenty-First Century: Whither the UN?" during the third day of La Salle's week long Diplomat-In-Residence Program. They offered their views on the UN's accomplishments, challenges and future. They also discussed the questions: Can the Organization withstand peacekeeping and conflict resolution changes and challenges resulting from the end of the cold war era? Can it respond effectively as an independent entity without major power leadership? Is the internationalist spirit that founded the Organization relevant in an age of nationalism? Can UN resolutions override national sovereignty? Is world government a feasible idea in the 21st century?

Throughout the week La Salle was also visited by diplomats from Tanzania, Chile, Japan, Ukraine and Israel. These officials examined such topics as "Religion in Global Society," "Inside the UN at 50," and "The UN and Problems of Regional Economic Development."

La Salle's Diplomat-in-Residence Program aims to strengthen international studies at the university. La Salle sponsors two or three day visits by foreign and American diplomats and officers of international organizations that include lectures, classroom visits, meetings with select groups on and off campus and conferences and symposia with journalists and academics.

University Hosts Special Celebration Commemorating the Vatican-Israeli Accord and Catholic-Jewish Relations

After the celebration in the De La Salle Chapel, Brother President Joseph F. Burke (left), Gratz College President Gary S. Schiff (center) and Israel's Consul General Eviatar Manor joined other guests in signing a replica of the Vatican-Israeli Accord.

La Salle hosted a special program of spiritual and historic dialogue, readings, and music to celebrate Catholic-Jewish relations and commemorate the first anniversary of the establishment of full diplomatic relations between the Vatican and the State of Israel, in the De La Salle Chapel on March 30.

The event also celebrated the unique relationship between La Salle and Gratz College, the nation's oldest independent college of Jewish studies located in nearby Melrose Park, Pa. The two institutions cooperate in the training of teachers and administrators in the field of special needs education in what is believed to be the first cooperative higher educational agreement between a Catholic and Jewish institution.

Brother President Joseph Burke said that the special program was arranged to celebrate something "that has been going on between Catholics and Jews for many, many years in many, many cities and that is cooperation, and consolidation, and common purpose.

"We are tonight sharing common heritages, common experiences, and common understanding," he explained, adding that La Salle has a long history both in terms of our faculty and our students and a strong connection with the Jewish community.

"Our connection with Gratz College is really nothing new for us. It's very much a part of our fabric and part of what we are all about."

Eviatar Manor, the Consul-General of Israel, said that the Holy Land is not just comprised of stoic stones and places which we have to memorize. "It is something that is alive," he added. The agreement between Israel and the Vatican "should not be just letters written on a parchment, but it should be a vibrant, vital and constant element in our relationship that we should develop."

Msgr. Joseph W. Devlin, assistant professor of religion at La Salle, said that the Vatican-Israeli accord goes well beyond the formalization of diplomatic relationships between the Holy See and the Israeli state.

The signing of the Vatican-Israeli Accord has been widely acclaimed as a long-overdue, milestone event in the relations between the Holy See and Israel as well as between Catholic and Jewish people.

"It points out the unique nature of the relationship between the Catholic church and the Jewish people and the historic process of reconciliation and growth and mutual understanding and friendship between Catholics and Jews," explained Dr. Devlin. "It reflects the decision to urge new relations between equals and to consider their problems in the spirit of cordiality rather than rivalry.

"Article II commits the two groups of believers to a comprehensive endeavor: they are committed to appropriate cooperation in combating all forms of anti-semitism, and all kinds of racism and religious intolerance and in promoting mutual understanding among nations, tolerance among communities, and respect for human life and dignity. The teaching of the Vatican Council is here, translated into an agenda for action."

REUNION WEEKEND

More than 700 members of the Alumni, their spouses, and guests from the classes of '40, '45, '50, '55, '60, '65, '70, '75, '80, '85, and '90 returned to campus for a memorable weekend of activities and reminiscing on May 19 and 20.

Crown Cork & Seal CEO

William J. Avery

Receives Leadership Award at Charter Dinner

William J. Avery, chairman, chief executive officer, and president of Crown Cork & Seal Company, received La Salle's third annual Leadership Award at the Charter Dinner celebrating the 132nd anniversary of the university on March 18 in Lincoln Hall of The Union League of Philadelphia.

Avery was honored for his "outstanding leadership in the corporate, civic and governmental communities that shape the quality of life in this region," according to Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., who presented the award.

"By joining the celebration of our Charter Dinner with the presentation of this award, we have a unique opportunity to celebrate La Salle's history and to honor one of those individuals whose contributions have made a critical difference in our community," added Brother Burke.

Under Avery's outstanding leadership, Crown Cork & Seal Company has continued its growth as one of the largest packaging companies in the world. Since his election as CEO in 1990, Crown's profits have tripled. Annual sales have gone from $1.5 billion to $4 billion. Avery has improved Crown's solid fiscal foundation through a series of strategic national and international acquisitions. The company has also diversified into the plastic packaging industry.

Michael J. McKenna, '62, executive vice president and president of the North American Division of Crown Cork & Seal Company, served as master of ceremonies.

Charles J. Reilly, '62, a La Salle trustee and president and CEO of Reilly Foam Corporation, and Thomas N. Pappas, '70, managing principal and senior vice president of Johnson & Higgins, were co-chairs of the dinner.

The Charter Dinner celebrates the founding of La Salle College on March 20, 1863, and pays tribute to generations of Christian Brothers, laypersons, and clergy whose dedication has made La Salle the prominent institution that it is today. More than $85,000 was raised for the university's scholarship fund at the black-tie event.

Co-Founder of Medicare Delivers Holroyd Lecture

Dr. William L. Kissick (center), a prominent health care management specialist at the University of Pennsylvania who helped to draft Medicare legislation, delivered the 16th annual Holroyd Lecture on March 31 in the Dan Rodden Theatre on campus.

Also pictured are Drs. Gerald J. O'Keefe, '68 (left), president of the Alumni Health Professionals Association, and Joseph F. Girone, '79 (right), who delivered a special tribute to the late Brother James Muldoon, former chairman of the university's Biology Department and dean of arts and sciences.

Dr. Kissick discussed the health care management crisis, the financial and medical implications of alternative proposals—including the program suggested by the Clinton administration, and the requirement for long-term strategies.

A native of Detroit, Dr. Kissick graduated from Yale University in 1953 with doctorates in medicine and public health. While serving in the U.S. Public Health Service and Department of Health, Education, and Welfare from 1962-69, he was one of two physicians who helped draft Medicare. He drafted strategic planning for the Surgeon General until 1968 when President Johnson appointed him to the White House as executive director of the National Advisory Commission on Health Facilities.

The Holroyd Lecture is held annually to honor the memory of the late Dr. Roland Holroyd, professor emeritus and founder of the Biology Department at La Salle where he taught for 53 years. The event is co-sponsored by the university's School of Arts and Sciences and La Salle's Health Professionals Alumni Association.

Previous Holroyd Lectures at La Salle have featured C. Everett Koop, former Surgeon General of the United States; Thomas E. Starzl, chief of surgery at the University of Pittsburgh Medical School and a well-known pioneer in liver transplantation; Michael E. DeBakey, chancellor of Baylor College of Medicine who is noted for his treatment of cardiovascular diseases, and Otis R. Bowen, M.D., former U.S. Secretary of Health and Human Services, among others.

Hawk Mountain Bird Sanctuary Trip Scheduled

On Columbus Day, October 9, "Explorations," the university's new travel program, will sponsor a one-day bus trip to Hawk Mountain, in Kempton, Pa. The Hawk Mountain Bird Sanctuary on the eastern edge of the Appalachian Mountains was the world's first refuge created to protect birds of prey. Hawks, eagles, and falcons, among others, can all be seen in great numbers as they travel southward on their migration. The trip will depart from and return to La Salle. The cost will include a walking stick, courtesy of Al Cantello, '55, transportation, and a box lunch. Keep an eye on your mail for price and additional information or call the Alumni Office at (215) 951-1081.

Augustine Falcione turned a trip to Europe into the most successful educational tour operation in the nation.

Augustine Falcione displays collection of plates depicting the fleet of the old Pan American Airlines in the offices of the Cultural Heritage Alliance.

By Robert S. Lyons, Jr., '61

Back in 1968, as a young foreign language teacher at Philadelphia High School for Girls, Augustine F. Falcione, '62, took an educational tour of Europe organized by one of the leading student-travel companies of the day.

"I returned to the United States convinced that I could improve these student tours by offering better services more economically," Mr. Falcione recalled recently. "Things like using experienced tour directors, hiring local guides who knew their areas thoroughly, and putting people in 3 and 4 star hotels with private bathroom facilities rather than the lesser-quality hostels and student dormitories that were being used predominantly at the time."

Mr. Falcione also thought that he could make the trips more of a cultural experience where tourists could actually "live" the language they were studying. He returned to Italy in 1969 with a carefully-organized tour of 80 students. The following year, he took two planes ("almost the entire school") overseas. Soon other Philadelphia schools joined in, then some suburban institutions and, eventually, high schools, colleges and universities from throughout the country.

Today, as it nears its millionth customer, Augustine Falcione's Cultural Heritage Alliance is the most successful educational tour operator in the nation. It has provided travel services to more than 12,000 of the country's 16,000 high schools. When it began in 1969, there were 200 similar operations throughout the United States. Today there are only three major companies. CHA is the only American company. The others are Swedish and British. In addition to its corporate headquarters near Philadelphia's Independence Hall, with a full-time staff of 55, CHA also has 20 employees working overseas at its European headquarters in London as well as in offices in Paris, Rome, Madrid, and Athens. When CHA tours are in operation, another 500 people serve as tour directors and group leaders.

How did the CHA expand so quickly?

“Word of mouth is the most powerful tool that we have,” said Falcione’s wife, Louise, who serves as senior vice president of the Cultural Heritage Alliance. “Teachers recommend us to their colleagues and friends.”

“Today there are more sophisticated ways of reaching people,” adds Augustine Falcione. “But if somebody tells you that I traveled with them and I’m happy, that is the best endorsement.”

CHA “grew by leaps and bounds,” especially from the late-1970s to the mid-1980s, primarily because Augustine Falcione found a very economical way to introduce teachers and students to foreign countries in a short period of time while making it an enjoyable educational experience.

“At that time, travel with students was really a novel concept,” said Mrs. Falcione. “It was something that only the rich people--the elite--would do, but our goal was to introduce it to everyone, to make it more affordable, so they could really see the value of studying a foreign language. They could see that it wasn’t just words, but it really had to do with people and cultures and different ways of living.”

“It used to be that languages were taught almost like in a vacuum,” said Augustine, recalling that a great majority of the language teachers traveling with him in the early days had never been to Europe. “People learned certain things, but could they really speak the language? What they learned in the classroom seemed almost to be irrelevant at times.

“Our trips almost became an excuse to raise students to another level. They became terrific, powerful, educational weapons. They’re like appetizers that make students hungrier to come back for more.”

Today, student travel is becoming the focus of the curriculum at many schools, not just in the languages but in such disciplines as art, music, and the sciences. About 60% of CHA’s travelers are high school students and teachers. Many universities and colleges offer academic credit for the tours. Students must prepare by studying the language and culture of the foreign countries. Institutions often plan their trips a year or so in advance, opting to take one of CHA’s 112 pre-arranged tours or having a specific trip designed to serve their special interests. Last year, for example, a college professor from North Carolina took his students on a very detailed tour of automobile factories in Europe. Many travelers return to take tours for the second, third, or fourth time and adult groups like retired teachers often arrange trips for their colleagues.

“Each time I go, I just feel more and more certain that this is the best thing possible for a kid to experience,” says John Hower, one of the CHA counselors on the company’s promotional video. “I had a parent tell me that one of his kids that I had taken ten years ago matured more in those three weeks than had matured in the past ten years. They learn so much that they can't learn in a small town of 4,000 or even a large town of 100,000."

The most popular destinations are Italy ("by far, number 1 because of its historical heritage," says Augustine), Spain, and England. Australia has recently become very popular. The tours are reviewed, updated, and changed annually. Mr. Falcione travels to Europe at least once a month to negotiate the best prices and accommodations personally with owners and managers of hotels and restaurants, operators of airlines and bus companies, and other travel officials. "Taking the easy way out and talking over the phone is just not the same," he explained, adding that more can be accomplished with face-to-face meetings.

Local tour directors and group leaders ("the key element to the success of our operation," said Louise) are carefully selected, trained, and tested so they can better understand how to deal with American students. They learn how the expectations of these student may differ from a typical tourist visiting Europe for the first time. "We have developed a very good core of these people over the past 26 years," she said. "Believe it or not, they do ultimately make or break a tour."

The Falcione's daughter, Tina, joined the company in 1990 after her graduation with a degree in English from Bryn Mawr College. She handles the organization's desktop publishing operation, developing the annual catalogue as well as brochures, newsletters, and other promotional and training material. Tina's operation is just one of the sophisticated computerized innovations that have been introduced to improve CHA's efficiency as it has expanded into a world-wide organization. By developing its own specialized software, CHA can maintain profiles on each of its clients, keep track of all itineraries, download information from airlines, process all tickets, pay its vendors in foreign currencies, and communicate directly with its European offices from Philadelphia.

"The incredible revolution in technology has been really amazing," said Louise. "When you think of Europe, you think of this far-away continent. When we think of our London office, we think of them being right upstairs."

When CHA first started, all tickets including the name of the passenger, all flight information, individual prices and times, were written and validated by hand. For example, a typical itinerary for a group might include flying from Greensboro, N.C., to New York, to London, and Athens with a possible "empty leg," then back from Paris, to London, to Atlanta and Greensboro. With thousands of travelers taking one of these tours, processing tickets became an astronomical chore.

"This is how primitive it used to be," recalled Louise. "But with the sophistication of today, you simply can retrieve all of that information from the computer's memory with a single, fixed-letter code. From this code, you maintain the history of the booking including all times, locations, prices, and dates, a complete profile of the passenger, tickets that were issued, and the dates everything was confirmed by hotels and the airlines.”

Operating such a complex business does have its frustrating moments. Like the time about 15 years ago when pilots from the old Pan American Airlines were threatening to go on strike which would have stranded about 10,000 CHA tourists in France. This was before the days of airline deregulation when it was much less expensive to use charter planes rather than regularly-scheduled flights.

“The only way that you could take these passengers in large numbers at very good prices was to charter the whole airplane,” said Augustine. “Because the demand for these tours was so incredible, we had to go to the airlines that were able to supply the aircraft.” Only Pan AM and TWA had enough 757s available.

“I remember that night clearly,” recalled Louise. “We had about 15 planes leaving the next morning and if Pan Am had gone on strike, there was nothing that anybody could do.”

Louise was sitting in CHA's former headquarters on Broad street in South Philadelphia. Augustine was in Paris. It was 3:00 A.M. The phone rang and a voice from Washington said that the negotiators were still talking. “The planes are going to fly,” I was told. “Call

Augustine in Paris and tell him that everything is a go.” And I called him and said, “they’re coming!” Then I remember jumping about 20 feet in the air.”

The Falciones often find themselves putting in 14-hour days, six and seven days a week. Working until 2 or 3:00 A.M. is not unusual. “I remember many times that we were so exhausted that actually we slept right on the floor of the office,” recalled Augustine.

The Falciones don't mind the long hours, however.

“We happen to like what we're doing,” said Augustine. “After all, this is an extension of what we were trained to do. The only difference is that we have explored a new way of looking at things. But we are still teachers one way or another. Still teachers at heart!”

Mr. Falcione was born in Italy and came to America at the age of 16. Soon he was working for an Italian newspaper in Philadelphia where he met Dr. Domenico A. DiMarco, a long-time lecturer in the university's Foreign Languages and Literature Department. DiMarco encouraged him to enroll at La Salle where he played varsity soccer and found himself struggling at times with the English language and such professors as Roland Holroyd, whose biology class was filled with pre-med students.

“My memories of La Salle have certainly been very, very warm through the years,” said Augustine Falcione who went on to earn an education degree. “Some of my teachers were really excellent. Dr. Holroyd was a great person and a great teacher. I had a couple of (English) classes with Dan Rodden. He just was absolutely great. La Salle certainly did a wonderful job of educating me.”

Mr. Falcione met his wife, a teacher at South Philadelphia High School and a graduate of Temple University, while both were studying one night in a branch of the Philadelphia Free Library. “I saw her carrying books and said, ‘could I be of help?’” Augustine recalled. “She said ‘yes’ and that was the beginning.” Louise was also born in Italy and had originally planned on staying in country only for a year after graduating.

Mr. Falcione, who has donated a significant amount of video equipment to Channel 56, feels that the university's cable TV station, could be La Salle's “voice” to the alumni. “It's a good way to communicate, to encourage alumni participation,” he said. “A wealth of people have graduated from La Salle and are not as involved as they should be. I think that La Salle has a wonderful name and I would like to see the alumni do more for the university.”

Honor Roll of Donors

Dear Friends:

On behalf of everyone at La Salle, I am very pleased to introduce the 1994-95 Honor Roll of Donors by thanking the many individuals and organizations whose continuing loyalty and generosity have contributed so significantly to the quality of the education the University offers.

Despite the many challenges confronting private colleges and universities, and indeed all nonprofits in our region, 1994-95 proved to be an outstanding year for La Salle's development program. Among the many accomplishments that are documented in the Honor Roll, the following highlights warrant special mention:

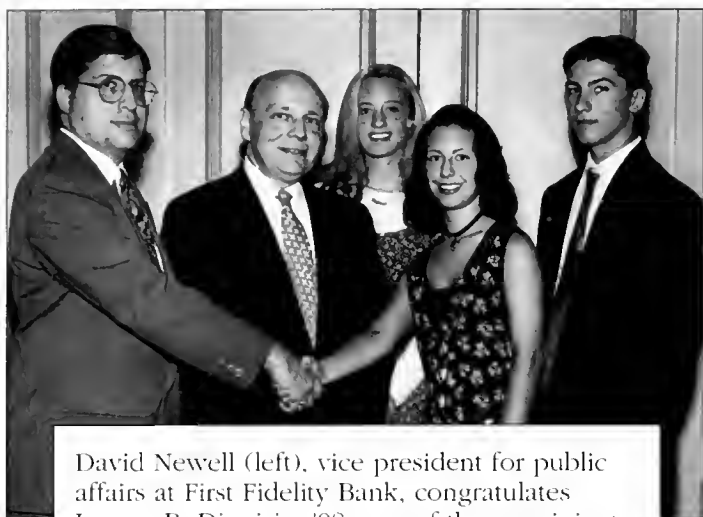

1. Total gifts and grants increased from $ 5,388,328 to $ 6,052,214, a 12.3% increase. As a result, 1994-95 supplanted 1993-94 as the third most successful year in the history of the University's fund-raising program.
2. Alumni donors increased from 5,811 to 7,422, a 28% increase, and alumni donations increased from $ 1,621,956 to $ 2,188,770, a 35% increase. Both the number of alumni donors and the total of alumni donations were the highest in the University's history.
3. Parent donors increased from 738 to 917, a 24% increase, and parent donations increased from $ 55,192 to $ 111,415, a 102% increase. Both the number of parent donors and the total of parent donations were the highest in the University's history.
4. The third annual Charter Dinner/La Salle University Leadership Award Ceremony honored Mr. William J. Avery, Chairman, President and CEO of Crown Cork and Seal Company, Inc., and raised more than $ 85,000 for the University's scholarship fund, a 57% increase from 1994 and a 143% increase from 1993.
5. Two major bequests were received during 1994-95: $ 25,000 from the estate of Mary E. Dean and $ 401,230 from the estate of Catherine E. Doran.
6. Four endowed scholarships received significant funding during 1994-95: The J. Hugh and Nancy Devlin Scholarship Fund, the Robert L. Dean Scholarship Fund, the Paul R. Doran and Catherine E. Doran Memorial Fund, and the Trans Freight, Inc. Scholarship Fund.

Through the continuing loyalty and support of our many benefactors, La Salle will maintain and enhance the Christian Brothers' long-standing commitment to scholarship and teaching excellence. As have their predecessors, future generations of La Salle students will directly benefit from the generous financial assistance the University has received from the many individuals and organizations that are listed in this Honor Roll of Donors.

Once again, many thanks for your dedication and commitment to La Salle University and its students.

Brother Emery C. Mollenhauer, F.S.C., Ph.D., associate professor of English, joins Mr. and Mrs. C. Gerard Kramer at the President's Dinner honoring major donors to the university. Mr. Kramer, '58, and his wife, Mary, are members of the university's San Miguel Club.

Drs. Phyllis Betz (right), a lecturer in the English Department, and Joanne Conway (second from right), who teaches in the Religion and Human Services Psychology Departments, received the second annual "von Allmen Awards" given to La Salle University adjunct faculty members for teaching excellence, on April 19. They were presented by Erwin and Carolyn Rye von Allmen (pictured at left). Mr. von Allmen is a lecturer in the university's MBA program and president of W.C. Smith Inc., a Philadelphia-based confectionery and specialty food equipment company.

MEMORIAL GIFTS

Some of the most meaningful gifts La Salle receives are made in honor or in memory of a beloved friend, colleague, or family member. This past year, memorial gifts were donated in the names of thirty-seven (37) individuals, an inspiring indication of the donors' regard for both the University and the individuals listed below.

THE CHRISTIAN BROTHERS

Like their founder, St. John Baptist De La Salle, patron of the University, the Brothers have committed their lives to education. The Christian Brothers' unwavering devotion, guidance and love for La Salle have been truly their hallmark since the University was founded in 1863.

These religious who serve as faculty, administrators and staff members contributed $203,540 to the University in fiscal 1995 for scholarship assistance. La Salle students have been blessed with their influence of 132 years.

Brother E. Gerald Fitzgerald, F.S.C., '70, former director of admissions, welcomes Dr. and Mrs. William J. Markmann, '70, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph G. Markmann, '49, to the President's Dinner at the National Society Colonial Dames of America in center city Philadelphia.

Jim and Bonnie McDonald share a light-hearted moment with Jake and Barbara Garrison at the President's Dinner. On June 30th, Jim McDonald, '58, retired after 34 years of service to the university as director of alumni.

Every effort has been made to ensure the accuracy of the donor list. Occasionally, a donor's name is inadvertently misspelled or omitted. If, by chance, an error has been made, please accept our apology and please notify us of the mistake at 215-951-1539.

THE UGO DONINI CLUB

The Ugo Donini Club acknowledges those of the La Salle family who contribute $250 to $499 annually. Named for Professor Ugo Donini (1901-1980), this club was established in 1982.

Tom and Jean Leonard chat with Tom and Betsey Mahoney at the National Society Colonial Dames of America. Mr. Leonard, '70, a partner with Coopers and Lybrand, and Mr. Mahoney, '70, a partner with Arthur Andersen LLP, have both contributed generously to the Joseph G. Markmann Alumni Endowed Chair in Accounting which is now valued at more than $1.3 million.

All gifts and grants reported in the Honor roll of Donors represent payments received by the University between July 1, 1994 and June 30, 1995. Multi-year pledges and contributions received after July 1, 1995 will be published in subsequent Honor Rolls as payments are received.

University Receives Almost $400,000 From Estate of the Late Catherine E. Doran, '78

Catherine E. Doran

La Salle has been named beneficiary of $399,480 from the estate of the late Catherine E. Doran, '78, who served as a part-time volunteer in the university's Art Museum for 15 years before her sudden death on June 2, 1994 as she was returning from a trip to China.

The bequest will be used for the establishment of an endowment for scholarship aid and assistance to students majoring in English. It will be named the "Dr. Paul R. Doran and Catherine E. Doran Memorial Fund."

Dr. James A. Butler, chairman of the university's English Department, said that the Doran bequest could almost be considered a "second chance scholarship" because it will be used to reward junior and senior English majors for outstanding performances.

"So many of our students just missed winning competitive scholarships when they enrolled at La Salle," explained Butler. "But they have done wonderfully in the classroom since then and truly deserve some financial assistance."

It is fitting, added Butler, that these scholarships will "perpetuate the memory of two people who had the courage to make a number of successful career changes themselves."

Dr. Paul R. Doran

Mrs. Doran's husband, Paul, the former dean of the School of Arts and Sciences and a long-time English professor at La Salle died in 1987. He was an expert on Restoration and 18th Century Literature, particularly the works of Jonathan Swift.

Dr. Doran, who joined the La Salle faculty in 1949, was chairman of the English Department from 1950 to 1952 and dean of arts and sciences from 1956 to 1969. A former member of the Christian Brothers, he was known as Brother G. Robert, F.S.C., when he served as dean and during his earlier years at the university.

Caroline Wistar, the curator of the Art Museum, praised Mrs. Doran at the time of her death for "her faith, courage, and abundant generosity" and recalled her as "a living embodiment of Christian virtue, a devoted and tireless worker, a down to earth friend with an enormous capacity for fun, adventure, and laughter."

Anyone who is similarly interested in making a bequest to La Salle and/or in creating some type of endowed scholarship fund should contact the Development Office, c/o La Salle University, 1900 W. Olney Avenue, Philadelphia, PA 19141 (215-951-1540).

Judith Beck (left), manager, finance, college recruiting services, and Nancy E. Suswal, administrator, finance, college recruiting services, present Johnson and Johnson Family of Companies' $3,000 donation to John F. Reardon, Ed.D., '59 (center), chairman of the Accounting Department; Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, and Louis A. Lamorte, Jr. (right), director of career planning. Ms. Suswal was the 1995 recipient of La Salle's "Recruiter of the Year" award.

Brother Charles E. Gresh, F.S.C., '55, director of development, welcomes Mr. and Mrs. Lawrence E. McAlee, '59, to the third annual Charter Dinner La Salle University Leadership Award Ceremony. The event honored William J. Avery, chairman, president, and CEO of Crown Cork and Seal Company, Inc., and raised more than $85,000 for the university's scholarship fund.

Robert T. Wright presents the class of 1960's 35th anniversary gift to Brother President Joseph F. Burke, F.S.C., Ph.D., '68, during reunion week-end in May. Through their collective efforts, the reunion classes raised $336,364 for the 1994-95 annual fund campaign.

Pearle Dandridge, external affairs representative, presents Bell Atlantic's check for $35,000 to Fred J. Foley, Jr., Ph.D., the university's vice president for development, following the dedication of the new Communication Center. The Screening Room in the Communication Center has been named in recognition of Bell Atlantic's generous financial support for the renovation of the former St. Basil's elementary school.

Families participating in the Parents' Weekend Program walk from Mass in the De La Salle Chapel in College Hall to dinner in the North Dorm Dining Hall. During 1994-95, 917 parents donated $11,115 to the university. Both the number of parent donors and the total of parent donations were the highest in La Salle's history.

ANNUAL FUND VOLUNTEERS 1994-1995

The Development and Annual Fund Offices deeply appreciate the efforts of our many volunteers: phonathoners, reunion gift chairs, matching gift coordinators, and diverse committee members. Special "Thanks" are in order to First Fidelity Bancorporation for hosting our volunteer phonathons, and to Timothy Browne, our dedicated office volunteer.

Jim Murray To Receive Signum Fidei Medal at Alumni Awards Dinner on November 17

Former Philadelphia Eagles general manager Jim Murray, who founded the first Ronald McDonald House in Philadelphia and helped to turn the concept into a world-wide success, has been named recipient of the 54th Signum Fidei Medal, the highest award of La Salle's Alumni Association.

Murray will be honored at the Alumni Association's annual Awards Dinner in the La Salle Union Ballroom on Friday, Nov. 17 with cocktails beginning at 6:30 P.M. and dinner following at 7:15 P.M. Members of the university's senior class will be inducted into the Alpha Epsilon Alumni Honor Society at the same event.

During his 14 years with the Eagles, Murray assumed leadership roles in a number of community projects. He helped start the very successful Eagles Fly for Leukemia campaign. As founder of the first Ronald McDonald House in Philadelphia in 1974, he helped persuade many of his peers in the NFL to become involved in the unique concept.

The McDonald Houses provide temporary homes at little or no cost, for the families of children undergoing treatment for various illnesses at nearby hospitals. There are now 160 such houses throughout the world.

Murray is president of Jim Murray Ltd., a sports promotion and marketing firm.

The Signum Fidei Medal derives its name from the motto of the Brothers of the Christian Schools--"Sign of Faith." It is given to the individual who has made "most noteworthy contributions to the advancement of humanitarian principles in keeping with the Christian tradition."

Previous recipients include Bishop Fulton J. Sheen, R. Sargent Shriver, Senator Eugene McCarthy, and last year's awardee, Molly Scanlon Kelly, a prominent pro-life activist and advocate of teenage chastity.

New Board Members Elected

The following members of the Class of 1995 have been elected to serve on the Alumni Board of Directors: Joanne Brown, Coreen Ballisty, Tony Diaz, and Ann Marie Ferro.

Some of the 51 La Salle alumni and friends who sailed on the maiden voyage of the Alumni Association's Explorations travel program gathered for a group photograph on Norwegian Cruise Line's SS Norway.

EXPLORATIONS Travel Program Sets Sail Successfully

The Alumni Association's new travel program, EXPLORATIONS, embarked on a highly successful maiden voyage on July 15 when some 51 alumni members and their friends set sail from Miami on Norwegian Cruise Line's SS Norway, the largest passenger ship in operation today.

Carmella Evans, '88, the tour leader and EXPLORATIONS chairperson, said that the travel committee is thrilled not only with this trip but with the positive overall interest and enthusiasm for alumni group travel.

Travelers enjoyed four ports of call during the week-long trip: the islands of St. Martin, St. John, St. Thomas, and NCL's private island in the Bahamas, Paradise Island. They were also treated to a visit by Tom Gola, '55, the former La Salle basketball All America who was on board along with other former National Basketball Association players.

"Traveling with other alumni really made this trip a special experience," said Evans. "The variety among the group--representing classes ranging from 1949 to 1988--made for an interesting and entertaining trip."

George Dotsey, Retired Army Officer and Former Arms Control Negotiator, Named Alumni Director

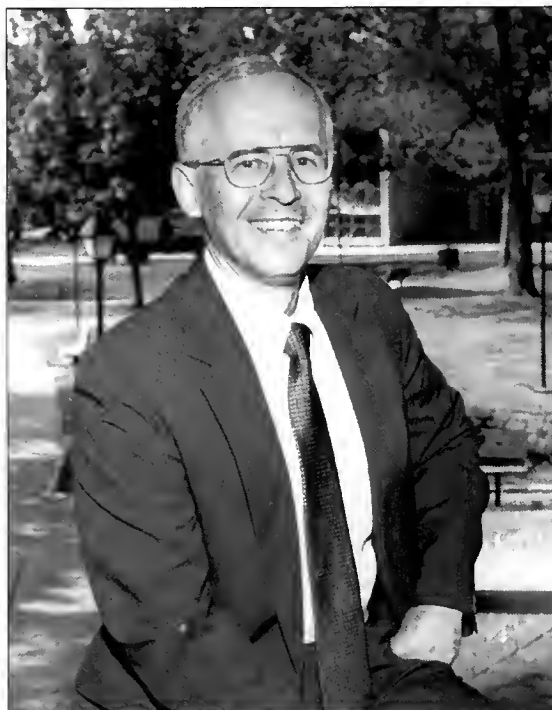

George J. (Bud) Dotsey, '69, has been appointed La Salle's director of alumni, succeeding James J. McDonald, '58, who retired on June 30 after 33 years of service coordinating the activities of the university's 39,000 graduates.

Dotsey, who officially began his duties on Aug. 14, majored in English at La Salle and later earned a master's degree in education at Georgia State University. He was recommended for the position by a nine person selection committee comprised of alumni, faculty, and administrators. He will report to Dr. Fred J. Foley, Jr., the university's vice president for development.

Dotsey recently retired as a Lieutenant Colonel in the U.S. Army after a 26-year military career that included serving as an arms control negotiator dealing with the Soviet Union, an assignment that he considers "probably the most meaningful job I ever had."

Joining the negotiations shortly before the treaty was actually concluded with the Soviets, Dotsey spent three years with several U.S. Arms Control delegations convening in Geneva, Moscow, and Washington helping to insure that the weapons systems were properly dismantled and destroyed.

"That treaty to this day, I believe, is the only treaty that has removed from the face of the earth an entire class of weapons systems," said Dotsey. "Therefore, I think that it can be argued that we have contributed directly to world peace."

Dotsey spent the final six years of his Army career as director of the Officer Education Program at Princeton University where he achieved the distinction of commanding the #1 unit of its size in the nation. He served concurrently as dean of the Department of Military Science at Rider University and professor of military science at Trenton State College.

Previously, he had commanded Army field artillery units in Germany, Vietnam, and Fort Campbell, Ky. He also served as an international plans and operations staff officer for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) in Belgium. He worked as a long-range planner and executive officer to the Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans and Operations at the Pentagon before joining the Joint Chiefs of Staff in Washington as a strategic policy planner arms control negotiator.

Dotsey said that his education at La Salle contributed significantly to his successful military career. "My undergraduate days continue to be poignantly meaningful to me," he explained. "They provided the bridge from youth to adulthood for me. There are so many other memories--Tap-Off Rallies, basketball at the Palestra. We had an awesome team that year (22-1, second in the AP Poll, but NCAA probation kept the Explorers out of the national championship tournament). And, of course, being in the ROTC at a time when ROTC was not necessarily the most popular activity. We had a 2,000 man brigade, one of the largest in the country, and would march down Broad street to Holy Child Church for the annual St. Barbara's Day Mass.

"Being an English major taught me to communicate effectively, both orally and in writing. I think back to my undergraduate days and the professors I had and wish that I could thank them today for what they did. The Christian Brothers' ethic is at its best on the La Salle campus."

During Dotsey's Army career he crossed paths a number of times with General Stephen A. Silvasy, Jr., the son of the late Colonel Stephen A. Silvasy, who was commanding officer of La Salle's ROTC detachment during Dotsey's undergraduate days. "General Silvasy always smiles when he talks of his dad's time at La Salle. He has very fond memories of those days," recalls Dotsey.

The new alumni director said that his top priority at the university will be the revitalization and sustainment of alumni interest, primarily by encouraging networking, developing geographic chapters, and coordinating the interaction of La Salle's alumni, faculty, students, and on-campus constituencies.

"This is sort of analogous to weaving a tapestry," explained Dotsey. "All of the threads touch all of the other threads that are involved in the final picture."

One of La Salle's strongest points, said Dotsey, is its wonderful faculty.

"Qualitatively, there isn't a school in the nation that we can't stand up to as far as our educational product. When we have activities on campus, I would like to see alumni, faculty, and students interacting with each other. It's all part of networking, but it also reminds them that they belong to an institution that has a lot going for it and, as a result, they feel good about themselves. And that's a message that they can take back out to their respective lives whether they are an undergraduate, a business person, or a faculty member."

Dotsey also hopes to encourage more networking between students interested in a particular field and alumni working successfully in that profession. And he would like to see more alumni helping the Admissions Office by personally contacting prospective students--especially those who live far from campus--and offering to talk to them personally about La Salle.

Although a majority of La Salle's alumni live within an 80 mile radius of campus, Dotsey sees more and more graduates following the national geographic trend and relocating to places like New York, New England, Miami, Chicago, Dallas, Los Angeles, San Francisco, and the Pacific Northwest. Therefore, he said, strengthening alumni chapters in these areas will be instrumental in the revitalization of alumni interest and support of the university.

"So again, the networking, the linkage, the threads of the tapestry all hook together," Dotsey added.

Dotsey and his wife, Denise, live in Yardley, Pa. They have two daughters. Andrea, '93, a dual French-economics major, plans to pursue a career in international business and is now managing a K-Mart store in Connecticut. Danielle is a freshman at George Mason University, in Fairfax, Va.
